

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

v.

SIMPLE HEALTH PLANS LLC, et al.,

Defendants.

Case No.: 18-cv-62593-DPG

DEFENDANT STEVEN DORFMAN'S VERIFIED OMNIBUS REPLY IN SUPPORT OF HIS MOTION TO EXTEND MONTHLY ALLOWANCE

Defendant Steven Dorfman (“Dorfman”), through undersigned counsel, files this omnibus reply to the responses filed by the court-appointed receiver (the “Receiver”) [D.E. 221] (the “Receiver’s Response”) and Plaintiff the Federal Trade Commission (the “FTC”) [D.E. 220] (the “FTC’s Response” collectively, with the Receiver’s Response, the “Responses”) to Dorfman’s motion seeking to extend his monthly allowance (the “Allowance Motion”) [D.E. 214].

The Responses are loaded with falsities and mistruths. Prior to filing this reply, Dorfman gave the FTC and Receiver the opportunity to amend their Responses. Although the Receiver partially-acknowledged the inaccuracies in his amended Receiver’s Response, both parties incorrectly represent that Dorfman: (i) failed to take all requested actions to obtain records for foreign accounts and repatriate any funds in those accounts; and (ii) concealed the existence of foreign accounts. Dorfman is compelled to file this reply to correct the record.

Prior to the initiation of this proceeding, defendant Simple Health used the services of two foreign affiliate call centers, Health Benefits Center, Corp. (the “Panama Call Center”) in Panama and Soluciones Omfri SRL (the “DR Call Center,” collectively, with the Panama Call Center, the “Foreign Call Centers”) to provide customer support to Simple Health’s customers.

Each of the Foreign Call Centers had bank accounts: (i) the Panama Call Center had two accounts at Banco LaFise in Panama (the “Panama Call Center Accounts”); and (ii) the DR Call Center had three accounts at Banco Popular Dominican Republic in the Dominican Republic (the “DR Call Center Accounts,” collectively, with the Panama Call Center Accounts, the “Foreign Call Center Accounts”).

On May 14, 2019, the Court entered a preliminary injunction (the “PI”) [D.E. 139]. The PI required Dorfman to disclose all known assets in which he had an ownership interest. Id. at § V. The PI also required Dorfman to: (i) provide the FTC and Receiver with an accounting of foreign assets; and (ii) assist the FTC and Receiver in their efforts to repatriate those assets. Id. at § VI.

By the Allowance Motion, Dorfman merely seeks to extend his monthly allowance of $5,000 per month, pending final resolution of this proceeding.

The FTC and Receiver primarily object to the Court extending Dorfman’s allowance because they represent to the Court that Dorfman violated the Court’s Preliminary Injunction (the “PI”) [D.E. 139]. See FTC’s Response, p. 4-6 and Receiver’s Response, § II(B). Specifically, the FTC and Receiver represent to the Court that Dorfman: (i) has not worked with the FTC and Receiver to obtain records relating to the Foreign Call Center Accounts and repatriate any funds from those accounts; and (ii) concealed the existence of the Foreign Call Center Accounts from the FTC and the Receiver. Id. These allegations are unsupported by the facts.

First, the FTC and Receiver claim that Dorfman violated the PI because he failed to work with the FTC and Receiver to: (i) obtain records from the foreign financial institutions relating to the Foreign Call Center Accounts; and (ii) repatriate any funds from those accounts. The FTC and Receiver’s only support for this allegation is that Dorfman, the FTC, and Receiver have not received any response from the multiple requests Dorfman sent to the foreign financial institutions and any funds in the foreign accounts have not been successfully repatriated. This argument is circular, and is belied by the efforts Dorfman has undertaken (together with the Receiver and FTC) to obtain those records and funds. Indeed, correspondence between the Receiver's counsel and Dorfman's counsel reflects that the Receiver drafted the multiple letters that Dorfman sent to the foreign financial institutions requesting (i) records relating to the Foreign Call Center Accounts and (ii) that any funds in those accounts be transmitted directly to the Receiver's account. A copy of that correspondence is attached as composite Exhibit "A."

It is simply inexplicable how the FTC could argue that Dorfman has not undertaken reasonable efforts to obtain the requested records and funds. The foreign financial institutions' failure to respond to Dorfman's good faith requests cannot support that assertion. Written correspondence clearly evidences Dorfman's compliance with the PI. Today, Dorfman stands ready and willing to take any further steps the FTC or Receiver believe may assist to obtain the requested records or facilitate the repatriation of the funds. In fact, Dorfman has provided the FTC and Receiver with all online credentials for the Foreign Call Center Accounts that Dorfman has so that the Receiver and/or the FTC have direct access to the accounts. In fact, Dorfman even offered to travel to Panama and the Dominican Republic to visit the foreign financial institutions in person to attempt to obtain the records and facilitate the transfers. See correspondences attached as Exhibit "B."

Simply put, Dorfman has done everything that the FTC and Receiver has asked him to do to obtain the foreign financial account records and funds, remains ready to undertake any further reasonable requests, and is willing to travel abroad to facilitate the transfers.

Furthermore, Mr. Dorfman did not conceal the existence of the Foreign Call Center Accounts from the FTC or Receiver. Before the FTC initiated this proceeding, the corporate defendants employed hundreds of agents and employees. As President and CEO of Simple Health, Dorfman was responsible for managing numerous executives that reported to him. Those executives had direct responsibility for the businesses' various departments, including finance, operations, human resources, accounting, and marketing. Dorfman does not deny that he played a role in opening the accounts years ago and that he periodically executed financial and regulatory documents relating to those accounts. However, like in most mid-sized and large companies, as President and CEO, Dorfman did not oversee the day-to-day management of the corporate defendants' bank accounts, let alone the Foreign Call Center Accounts. When documents needed to be executed to maintain those accounts, employees in the respective corporate defendants' finance and accounting departments were tasked with identifying those requirements and preparing required documents for Dorfman's signature. Dorfman's initial failure to disclose the Foreign Call Center Accounts was not driven by deception, but rather was due to an error recalling the status of the Foreign Call Center Accounts. Dorfman's good faith error is underscored by the fact that the DR Call Center Accounts, the only accounts that the Dorfman has any information for, have a modest balance of approximately $24,000 and did not have any activity in the months preceding or since the FTC's initiation of this proceeding. Accordingly, the FTC's and Receiver's assertion that Dorfman somehow attempted to conceal the existence of the Foreign Call Center Accounts is unsupported by any facts and should be disregarded.

As a result of the FTC's action, Dorfman remains unemployable and does not have a source of income to support himself and his family. As a result of the pre-judgment restraint on assets imposed by this Court, Dorfman's personal assets are frozen. Meanwhile, the FTC's entitlement to that pre-judgment restraint on assets and the propriety of a pre-judgment receivership to preserve assets for a future penalty is now the subject of two pending appeals.<sup>1</sup> Further, only weeks ago, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with Dorfman's position, holding that the FTC is not authorized to seek monetary relief under Section 13(b). See FTC v. Credit Bureau Center, 937 F.3d 764 (7th Cir. 2019), a copy of which is attached as Exhibit "C." The FTC is currently scrambling to challenge that landmark decision. See FTC's Motion to Stay the Mandate filed on September 17, 2019 in FTC v. Credit Bureau Center, Case No. 18-2847, 18-3310, 7th Circuit Court of Appeals attached as Exhibit "D." Accordingly, there is a real likelihood that the Supreme Court will confirm that the FTC is not authorized to obtain the penalties and ancillary remedies, i.e. asset freezes and receiverships, in this proceeding. Therefore, the asset freeze restraining Dorfman's assets and receivership imposed over the corporate defendants by the PI may soon be dissolved. In anticipation of the Supreme Court's review of these issues, this Court should exercise its discretion and reauthorize Dorfman's monthly allowance, which is necessary to pay for his basic living expenses.

---

<sup>1</sup> See FTC v. Dorfman, 19-11932, 11th Cir. and FTC v. Dorfman, 19-13275.

WHEREFORE, Defendant Steven Dorfman respectfully requests an Order of the Court, substantially in the form annexed to the Allowance Motion, granting the Allowance Motion, extending Dorfman's monthly allowance of $5,000, and for all further relief that the Court deems just and proper.

Dated: October 22, 2019

DLA Piper LLP (US)

/s/ Ryan D. O'Quinn

Ryan D. O'Quinn (FBN 513857)

ryan.oquinn@dlapiper.com

Elan A. Gershoni (FBN 95969)

elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

200 South Biscayne Boulevard

Suite 2500

Miami, Florida 33131

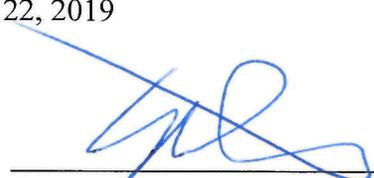

Telephone: 305.423.8553

Facsimile: 305.675.7885

*Counsel for Defendant
Steven Dorfman*

DECLARATION

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on October 22, 2019

_____
Steven Dorfman

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

The undersigned certifies that he filed this pleading through the court's electronic filing system and that all parties requesting electronic notice of pleadings have been served with the pleading.

/s/ Ryan D. O'Quinn _____

Ryan D. O'Quinn

EXHIBIT A

Gershoni, Elan

---

From: Rodriguez, Javier
Sent: Wednesday, September 11, 2019 6:05 PM
To: joan.levit@akerman.com
Cc: michael.goldberg@akerman.com; kimberly.smiley@akerman.com;
naim.surgeon@akerman.com; Gershoni, Elan; O'Quinn, Ryan
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.
Attachments: 2019.09.11 - Ltr to Banco Popular re Foreign Bank Accounts.pdf; 2019.09.11 - Ltr to Panama Law Firm re Foreign Bank Accounts.pdf

Dear Joan,

Please find attached the executed copies of the letters being sent to Panama and the Dominican Republic, along with their corresponding UPS labels (for tracking). Said letters are being sent out today.

Sincerely,

Javier Rodriguez
Legal Practice Specialist
T +1 305.423.8542
F +1 305.437.8131
E javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com

DLA Piper LLP (US)
200 South Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33131-5341
United States
www.dlapiper.com

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>
Sent: Wednesday, September 11, 2019 1:31 PM
To: joan.levit@akerman.com; O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>
Cc: Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>; michael.goldberg@akerman.com;
kimberly.smiley@akerman.com; naim.surgeon@akerman.com
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

We will get this letter and a similar letter to the law firm in Panama executed and delivered. We will send you copies of the correspondence.

Elan A. Gershoni
T +1 305.423.8567
E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

From: joan.levit@akerman.com <joan.levit@akerman.com>
Sent: Wednesday, September 11, 2019 11:56 AM

To: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>; O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>
Cc: Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>; michael.goldberg@akerman.com;
kimberly.smiley@akerman.com; naim.surgeon@akerman.com
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

[EXTERNAL]

---

Elan and Ryan,

We have accepted your revisions to the letter and added Akerman's wire instructions. We also added a "cc" to the Receiver. Please contact me should you have any additional questions.

Joan Levit

Of Counsel

Akerman LLP | 350 East Las Olas Boulevard, Suite 1600 | Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301

D: 954 468 2457

joan.levit@akerman.com

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com>
Sent: Tuesday, September 10, 2019 3:31 PM
To: Levit, Joan (OC-Ftl) <joan.levit@akerman.com>; Surgeon, Naim (Ptnr-Mia) <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>
Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com>; Goldberg, Michael (Ptnr-Ftl) <michael.goldberg@akerman.com>; Smiley, Kimberly (Para-Ftl) <kimberly.smiley@akerman.com>
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

Hi Joan, it was nice speaking with you earlier. As discussed, attached are our edits in redline.

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567

E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

From: joan.levit@akerman.com <joan.levit@akerman.com>
Sent: Monday, September 9, 2019 5:13 PM
To: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>; naim.surgeon@akerman.com
Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>;
michael.goldberg@akerman.com; kimberly.smiley@akerman.com
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

[EXTERNAL]

---

Elan,

As follow up to our conference call on Friday afternoon, attached is a suggested draft letter to Banco Popular to be sent by Steven Dorfman, and a copy of the original letter send by the Receiver. Please feel free to edit the letter to include any additional information in compliance with the Preliminary Injunction in repatriating the funds in the foreign accounts to the Receiver. Please prepare a similar letter for the Panama-based account(s). Thanks.

Joan Levit

Of Counsel

Akerman LLP | 350 East Las Olas Boulevard, Suite 1600 | Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301

D: 954 468 2457

joan.levit@akerman.com

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com>

Sent: Friday, September 6, 2019 12:06 PM

To: Surgeon, Naim (Ptnr-Mia) <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>; Levit, Joan (OC-Ftl) <joan.levit@akerman.com>

Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com>; Goldberg, Michael (Ptnr-Ftl) <michael.goldberg@akerman.com>

Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

Yes. I can do a call until 3 today.

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567

E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

From: naim.surgeon@akerman.com <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>

Sent: Friday, September 6, 2019 12:02 PM

To: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>; joan.levit@akerman.com

Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>; michael.goldberg@akerman.com

Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

[EXTERNAL]

---

Elan,

Joan Levit will be coordinating efforts along with Mike regarding obtaining records of the foreign accounts. I will be in trial starting this coming Monday.

Are you available at 2 pm today for a call with Joan and me?

Thank you,

Naim

Naim Surgeon

Partner

Akerman LLP | 98 Southeast Seventh Street, Suite 1100 | Miami, FL 33131

D: 305 982 5679 | F: 305 349 4654

Admitted to Practice in NY, NJ, and FL
naim.surgeon@akerman.com

vCard | Profile

CONFIDENTIALITY NOTE: The information contained in this transmission may be privileged and confidential, and is intended only for the use of the individual or entity named above. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. If you have received this transmission in error, please immediately reply to the sender that you have received this communication in error and then delete it. Thank you.

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com>
Sent: Thursday, September 5, 2019 12:32 PM
To: Goldberg, Michael (Ptrn-Ftl) <michael.goldberg@akerman.com>; Surgeon, Naim (Ptrn-Mia) <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>
Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com>
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

Michael and Naim, do you want to set up a call to discuss how Steve may assist you obtain records of the foreign accounts?

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567
E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>
Sent: Thursday, September 05, 2019 12:30 PM
To: Scott, Elizabeth C. <escott@ftc.gov>; O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>
Cc: Wei, Joannie <JWEI@ftc.gov>; Davis, James <JDAVIS@ftc.gov>; naim.surgeon@akerman.com; michael.goldberg@michael.goldberg@akerman.com <michael.goldberg@akerman.com>
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

Thanks, Libby. We have never received any requests to complete any specific forms or take any actions that would facilitate production of those documents. We will coordinate those requests with Michael.

We will also assess whether any amendments need to be made to Mr. Dorfman's financial disclosures and submit any necessary addendums along with the IRS Form 4506.

Finally, we stand by our objection to Interrogatory 4. Requests for information about third party resources that may supplement Mr. Dorfman's current lifestyle are not only irrelevant but clearly intended to harass, embarrass, and oppress Mr. Dorfman and intimidate any potential third parties. That discovery request is egregiously beneath the mission and integrity of a Federal government agency. We will work on finding dates for you.

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567
E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

VIA EMAIL: LNPAULINO@BPD.COM.DO & UPS DELIVERY

September 11, 2019

Mr. Lindel Paulino, Manager Inteligencia Financiera
Banco Popular
Avenida John F. Kennedy
#20 Apartado 1441-Zona Postal 1
Santo Domingo 10203
Dominican Republic

Re: Account Name: Soluciones Omfri SRL
Account No.:
Account No.:
Account No.:

All other unknown corporate accounts for which Steven Dorfman has signatory authority.

Dear Mr. Paulino:

I am the authorized signatory for the above-referenced accounts. I am also a party in the action commenced by the United States Federal Trade Commission in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Federal Trade Commission v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al, Case No.: 18-cv-62593-GAYLES. On May 14, 2019, the District Judge in my case entered the attached order (the "Preliminary Injunction"). The Preliminary Injunction is a binding Court order that, among other things, requires me to transfer funds held in any accounts outside the United States back to the United States.

In order to comply with my legal obligations under the Preliminary Injunction, I am cooperating with Michael Goldberg, a court-appointed fiduciary, ("Receiver") for Defendants, Simple Health Plans LLC, Health Benefits One LLC, Health Center Management LLC, Innovative Customer Care LLC, Simple Insurance Leads LLC, Senior Benefits One LLC, and each of their subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns (collectively, the "Receivership Defendants").

Please immediately provide me with copies of all account documents for the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, which shall include, but is not limited to:

1. All account opening documents;
2. Bank statements for each account for the period beginning January 1, 2016 through the present;

Mr. Lindel Paulino, Manager Inteligencia Financiera
Banco Popular
September 11, 2019
Page 2

3. In the event an account is closed or removed, the date the account was closed or removed, the total funds removed in order to close the account, and the name of the person or entity to whom such account or other asset was remitted; and
4. The identification of any safe deposit box, commercial mailbox, or storage facility that is either titled in the name, individually or jointly, of any Receivership Defendant, or is otherwise subject to access by any Receivership Defendant; or for which I have signature authority over.

Additionally, please provide me with copies of all documents needed to transfer funds to the Receiver. Additionally, please accept this letter as my instruction to transfer any and all funds held in the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, to the following account:

Bank: SunTrust Bank
Bank Location: 25 Park Place, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303
Swift Code: [REDACTED] (For International Wires Only)
Credit to: Akerman LLP IOTA Trust Account
Account Number: [REDACTED]
Reference: [REDACTED]

Please contact my attorney Ryan O'Quinn at DLA Piper, LLP (US) should you have any questions. Thank you for your prompt attention to this request.

Documents should be delivered to the following:

Ryan O'Quinn
DLA Piper, LLP
200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33133
Ryan.OQuinn@dlapiper.com
305.423.8553
Counsel to Steve Dorfman

Michael Goldberg,
Akerman LLP
350 East Las Olas Blvd.
Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301
Michael.Goldberg@akerman.com
954.468.2444
Court-Appointed Receiver

Respectfully,

Steven Dorfman

Enclosure – Preliminary Injunction
cc: Michael Goldberg, Receiver

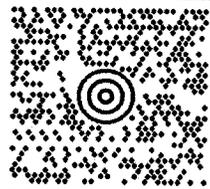

JAVIER RODRIGUEZ
305-423-8509
DLA PIPER LLP (US)
200 SOUTH BISCAYNE BLVD, STE 2
MIAMI FL 33131
UNITED STATES

2.0 LBS LTR 1 OF 1

SHP#: 0722 VAVT Y73
SHP WT: 2.0 LBS
DATE: 11 SEP 2019

SHIP TO:

MR. LINDEL PAULINO, MANAGER INTELIG
305-423-8509
BANCO POPULAR
FINANCIERA
AVENIDA JOHN F. KENNEDY
#20 APARTADO 1441-ZONA POSTAL 1
10203 SANTO DOMINGO
DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

UPS SAVER

TRACKING #: 1Z 072 2VA 04 9964 2922

1P

BILLING: P/P
DESC: DOCUMENTS

EDI-DOC

Client Matter (Billable ONLY): 423814-000002
TimeKeeper (TK) C/M MUST be Billable TK#: 39500
CS 21.5.31. WNTINV50 15.0A 07/2019

VIA UPS DELIVERY

September 11, 2019

Orlando A. Barsallo y Asociados
Eusebio A. Morales Street
Luz Maria Building, #3
Panama City, Panama

Re: Bank Name: Banco LaFise
Account Name: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Account No.:
Account No.:

All other unknown corporate accounts for which Steven Dorfman has signatory authority.

Dear Mr. Barsallo:

I am the authorized signatory for the above-referenced accounts. I am also a party in the action commenced by the United States Federal Trade Commission in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Federal Trade Commission v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al, Case No.: 18-cv-62593-GAYLES. On May 14, 2019, the District Judge in my case entered the attached order (the "Preliminary Injunction"). The Preliminary Injunction is a binding Court order that, among other things, requires me to transfer funds held in any accounts outside the United States back to the United States.

In order to comply with my legal obligations under the Preliminary Injunction, I am cooperating with Michael Goldberg, a court-appointed fiduciary, ("Receiver") for Defendants, Simple Health Plans LLC, Health Benefits One LLC, Health Center Management LLC, Innovative Customer Care LLC, Simple Insurance Leads LLC, Senior Benefits One LLC, and each of their subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns (collectively, the "Receivership Defendants").

Please immediately provide me with copies of all account documents for the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, which shall include, but is not limited to:

1. All account opening documents;
2. Bank statements for each account for the period beginning January 1, 2016 through the present;

Orlando A. Barsallo y Asociados
September 11, 2019
Page 2

3. In the event an account is closed or removed, the date the account was closed or removed, the total funds removed in order to close the account, and the name of the person or entity to whom such account or other asset was remitted; and
4. The identification of any safe deposit box, commercial mailbox, or storage facility that is either titled in the name, individually or jointly, of any Receivership Defendant, or is otherwise subject to access by any Receivership Defendant; or for which I have signature authority over.

Additionally, please provide me with copies of all documents needed to transfer funds to the Receiver. Additionally, please accept this letter as my instruction to transfer any and all funds held in the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, to the following account:

Bank: SunTrust Bank
Bank Location: 25 Park Place, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303
Swift Code: [REDACTED] (For International Wires Only)
Credit to: Akerman LLP IOTA Trust Account
Account Number: [REDACTED]
Reference: [REDACTED]

Please contact my attorney Ryan O'Quinn at DLA Piper, LLP (US) should you have any questions. Thank you for your prompt attention to this request.

Documents should be delivered to the following:

Ryan O'Quinn
DLA Piper, LLP
200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33133
Ryan.OQuinn@dlapiper.com
305.423.8553
Counsel to Steve Dorfman

Michael Goldberg,
Akerman LLP
350 East Las Olas Blvd.
Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301
Michael.Goldberg@akerman.com
954.468.2444
Court-Appointed Receiver

Respectfully,

Steven Dorfman

Enclosure – Preliminary Injunction
cc: Michael Goldberg, Receiver

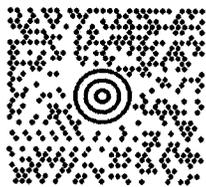

JAVIER RODRIGUEZ
305-423-8509
DLA PIPER LLP (US)
200 SOUTH BISCAYNE BLVD, STE 2
MIAMI FL 33131
UNITED STATES

2.0 LBS LTR 1 OF 1

SHP#: 0722 VAVB 3WZ
SHP WT: 2.0 LBS
DATE: 11 SEP 2019

SHIP TO:

ORLANDO A. BARSALLO Y ASOCIADOS
305 423-8559
ORLANDO A. BARSALLO Y ASOCIADOS
LUZ MARIA BUILDING, #3
EUSEBIO A. MORALES STREET
PANAMA CITY PANAM PANAMA

UPS SAVER

TRACKING #: 1Z 072 2VA 04 9684 9732

1P

BILLING: P/P
DESC: DOCUMENTS

EDI-DOC

Client Matter (Billable ONLY): 423814-000002
TimeKeeper (TK) C/M MUST be Billable TK#: 39500

CS 21.5.31 WNTNVS0 15.0A 07/2019

Gershoni, Elan

---

From: Rodriguez, Javier
Sent: Tuesday, September 24, 2019 5:47 PM
To: joan.levit@akerman.com; michael.goldberg@akerman.com; naim.surgeon@akerman.com
Cc: kimberly.smiley@akerman.com; O'Quinn, Ryan; Gershoni, Elan
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.
Attachments: 2019.09.25 - Ltr to Banco LaFise re Foreign Bank Accounts (Account Managers).pdf; 2019.09.25 - Ltr to Banco LaFise re Foreign Bank Accounts (V. Ramos).pdf; Account Info: Health Benefits Center, Corp.; Account Info: Health Benefits Center, Corp.

Good afternoon,

Please find attached copies of the letters that were sent via UPS to Lafise Bank today with their respective UPS tracking label attached. Also, attached are copies of the emails that were sent directly to the bank officers pursuant to your email below.

Sincerely,

Javier Rodriguez

Legal Practice Specialist

T +1 305.423.8542

F +1 305.437.8131

E javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com

DLA Piper LLP (US)
200 South Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33131-5341
United States
www.dlapiper.com

From: joan.levit@akerman.com <joan.levit@akerman.com>
Sent: Tuesday, September 24, 2019 12:30 PM
To: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>
Cc: kimberly.smiley@akerman.com; O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>; michael.goldberg@akerman.com; naim.surgeon@akerman.com
Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

[EXTERNAL]

---

Thanks Elan,

I want to follow up regarding Banco Lafise in Panama. In the event you cannot locate a better address for the attorney, I recommend that you reach out directly to the bank by mail and email. Based on the Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts, the address for the bank is Calle 50 Edif Global Piso 37, Panama City, Panama. Banco Lafise may also have an office in Miami. Steven Dorfman has also received email correspondence from bank representatives. I suggest that you send a copy of the letter to the bank employees listed on the attached email. Please contact me should you have any questions.

Joan Levit

Of Counsel

Akerman LLP | 350 East Las Olas Boulevard, Suite 1600 | Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301

D: 954 468 2457

joan.levit@akerman.com

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com>

Sent: Tuesday, September 24, 2019 12:16 PM

To: Levit, Joan (OC-Ftl) <joan.levit@akerman.com>; Goldberg, Michael (Ptrn-Ftl) <michael.goldberg@akerman.com>; Surgeon, Naim (Ptrn-Mia) <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>

Cc: Smiley, Kimberly (Para-Ftl) <kimberly.smiley@akerman.com>; O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@dlapiper.com>;

Rodriguez, Javier <javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com>

Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

All,

We obtained credentials to access the accounts for Soluciones Omfri (DR call center) at Banco Popular. Unfortunately, unlike most U.S. banks, electronic statements do not appear to be available online. Instead, we were able to pull the account registers for the three accounts (attached), which reflect that, cumulatively, they contain US$24,122.02 (RD$ 265,514.04). We are still waiting to receive statements and other bank records and will produce them to you when we receive them.

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567

E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

---

From: Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>

Sent: Wednesday, September 11, 2019 6:05 PM

To: joan.levit@akerman.com

Cc: michael.goldberg@akerman.com; kimberly.smiley@akerman.com; naim.surgeon@akerman.com; Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>; O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>

Subject: RE: FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al.

Dear Joan,

Please find attached the executed copies of the letters being sent to Panama and the Dominican Republic, along with their corresponding UPS labels (for tracking). Said letters are being sent out today.

Sincerely,

Javier Rodriguez

Legal Practice Specialist

T +1 305.423.8542

F +1 305.437.8131

E javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com

VIA UPS DELIVERY & EMAIL (lherrera@lafise.com & abarrera@lafise.com)

September 25, 2019

Banco LaFise
c/o Ana Carolina Barrera & Luis Herrera
Calle 50 Edif Global
Piso 37
Panama City, Panama
lherrera@lafise.com & abarrera@lafise.com

Re: Bank Name: Banco LaFise
Account Name: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Account No.: [REDACTED]
Account No.: [REDACTED]

All other unknown corporate accounts for which Steven Dorfman has signatory authority.

Dear Ms. Barrera & Mr. Herrera

I am the authorized signatory for the above-referenced accounts. I am also a party in the action commenced by the United States Federal Trade Commission in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Federal Trade Commission v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al, Case No.: 18-cv-62593-GAYLES. On May 14, 2019, the District Judge in my case entered the attached order (the "Preliminary Injunction"). The Preliminary Injunction is a binding Court order that, among other things, requires me to transfer funds held in any accounts outside the United States back to the United States.

In order to comply with my legal obligations under the Preliminary Injunction, I am cooperating with Michael Goldberg, a court-appointed fiduciary, ("Receiver") for Defendants, Simple Health Plans LLC, Health Benefits One LLC, Health Center Management LLC, Innovative Customer Care LLC, Simple Insurance Leads LLC, Senior Benefits One LLC, and each of their subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns (collectively, the "Receivership Defendants").

Please immediately provide me with copies of all account documents for the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, which shall include, but is not limited to:

1. All account opening documents;
2. Bank statements for each account for the period beginning January 1, 2016 through the present;

Banco LaFise
September 25, 2019
Page 2

3. In the event an account is closed or removed, the date the account was closed or removed, the total funds removed in order to close the account, and the name of the person or entity to whom such account or other asset was remitted; and
4. The identification of any safe deposit box, commercial mailbox, or storage facility that is either titled in the name, individually or jointly, of any Receivership Defendant, or is otherwise subject to access by any Receivership Defendant; or for which I have signature authority over.

Additionally, please provide me with copies of all documents needed to transfer funds to the Receiver. Additionally, please accept this letter as my instruction to transfer any and all funds held in the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, to the following account:

Bank: SunTrust Bank
Bank Location: 25 Park Place, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303
Swift Code: [REDACTED] (For International Wires Only)
Credit to: Akerman LLP IOTA Trust Account
Account Number: [REDACTED]
Reference: [REDACTED]

Please contact my attorney Ryan O'Quinn at DLA Piper, LLP (US) should you have any questions. Thank you for your prompt attention to this request.

Documents should be delivered to the following:

Ryan O'Quinn
DLA Piper, LLP
200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33133
Ryan.OQuinn@dlapiper.com
305.423.8553
Counsel to Steve Dorfman

Michael Goldberg,
Akerman LLP
350 East Las Olas Blvd.
Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301
Michael.Goldberg@akerman.com
954.468.2444
Court-Appointed Receiver

Respectfully,

Steven Dorfman

Enclosure – Preliminary Injunction
cc: Michael Goldberg, Receiver

UPS CampusShip: View/Print Label

1. Ensure there are no other shipping or tracking labels attached to your package. Select the Print button on the print dialog box that appears. Note: If your browser does not support this function select Print from the File menu to print the label.
2. Fold the printed label at the solid line below. Place the label in a UPS Shipping Pouch. If you do not have a pouch, affix the folded label using clear plastic shipping tape over the entire label.
3. GETTING YOUR SHIPMENT TO UPS
Customers with a Daily Pickup
 Your driver will pickup your shipment(s) as usual.

Customers without a Daily Pickup

Schedule a same day or future day Pickup to have a UPS driver pickup all your CampusShip packages. Hand the package to any UPS driver in your area. Take your package to any location of The UPS Store®, UPS Access Point(TM) location, UPS Drop Box, UPS Customer Center, Staples® or Authorized Shipping Outlet near you. Items sent via UPS Return Services (SM) (including via Ground) are also accepted at Drop Boxes. To find the location nearest you, please visit the Resources area of CampusShip and select UPS Locations.

FOLD HERE

JAVIER RODRIGUEZ 305-423-8509 DLA PIPER LLP (US) 200 SOUTH BISCAYNE BLVD, STE 2 MIAMI FL 33131 UNITED STATES SHIP TO: ANA CAROLINA BARRERA/ LUIS HERRERA 305423-8509 BANCO LAFISE PISO 37 CALLE 50 EDIF GLOBAL PANAMA CITY PANAM          PANAMA	2 LBS SHP #: 0722 VAT7 3TV SHP WT: 2 LBS SHP DWGT: 1 LBS DATE: 24 SEP 2019 DWGT: 13.10.1	1 OF 1

UPS SAVER TRACKING #: 1Z 072 2VA 04 9174 9797

1P
EDI-DOC
BILLING: P/P DESC: DOCUMENTS
Client Matter (Billable ONLY): 423814-000002 Timekeeper (TK) C/M MUST be Billable TK #: 40108 <small>CS 21.03.17. WNTN150 15.0A 07/2019</small>

VIA UPS DELIVERY & EMAIL (vmramos@lafise.com)

September 25, 2019

Banco LaFise
c/o Vanessa Ramos, Private Banking Officer
Calle 50 Edif Global
Piso 37
Panama City, Panama
vmramos@lafise.com

Re: Bank Name: Banco LaFise
Account Name: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Account No.: [REDACTED]
Account No.: [REDACTED]

All other unknown corporate accounts for which Steven Dorfman has signatory authority.

Dear Ms. Ramos:

I am the authorized signatory for the above-referenced accounts. I am also a party in the action commenced by the United States Federal Trade Commission in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Federal Trade Commission v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al, Case No.: 18-cv-62593-GAYLES. On May 14, 2019, the District Judge in my case entered the attached order (the "Preliminary Injunction"). The Preliminary Injunction is a binding Court order that, among other things, requires me to transfer funds held in any accounts outside the United States back to the United States.

In order to comply with my legal obligations under the Preliminary Injunction, I am cooperating with Michael Goldberg, a court-appointed fiduciary, ("Receiver") for Defendants, Simple Health Plans LLC, Health Benefits One LLC, Health Center Management LLC, Innovative Customer Care LLC, Simple Insurance Leads LLC, Senior Benefits One LLC, and each of their subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns (collectively, the "Receivership Defendants").

Please immediately provide me with copies of all account documents for the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, which shall include, but is not limited to:

1. All account opening documents;
2. Bank statements for each account for the period beginning January 1, 2016 through the present;

Banco LaFise
September 25, 2019
Page 2

3. In the event an account is closed or removed, the date the account was closed or removed, the total funds removed in order to close the account, and the name of the person or entity to whom such account or other asset was remitted; and
4. The identification of any safe deposit box, commercial mailbox, or storage facility that is either titled in the name, individually or jointly, of any Receivership Defendant, or is otherwise subject to access by any Receivership Defendant; or for which I have signature authority over.

Additionally, please provide me with copies of all documents needed to transfer funds to the Receiver. Additionally, please accept this letter as my instruction to transfer any and all funds held in the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, to the following account:

Bank: SunTrust Bank
Bank Location: 25 Park Place, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303
Swift Code: [REDACTED] (For International Wires Only)
Credit to: Akerman LLP IOTA Trust Account
Account Number: [REDACTED]
Reference: [REDACTED]

Please contact my attorney Ryan O'Quinn at DLA Piper, LLP (US) should you have any questions. Thank you for your prompt attention to this request.

Documents should be delivered to the following:

Ryan O'Quinn
DLA Piper, LLP
200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33133
Ryan.OQuinn@dlapiper.com
305.423.8553
Counsel to Steve Dorfman

Michael Goldberg,
Akerman LLP
350 East Las Olas Blvd.
Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301
Michael.Goldberg@akerman.com
954.468.2444
Court-Appointed Receiver

Respectfully,

Steven Dorfman

Enclosure – Preliminary Injunction
cc: Michael Goldberg, Receiver

UPS CampusShip: View/Print Label

1. Ensure there are no other shipping or tracking labels attached to your package. Select the Print button on the print dialog box that appears. Note: If your browser does not support this function select Print from the File menu to print the label.
2. Fold the printed label at the solid line below. Place the label in a UPS Shipping Pouch. If you do not have a pouch, affix the folded label using clear plastic shipping tape over the entire label.
3. GETTING YOUR SHIPMENT TO UPS
Customers with a Daily Pickup
 Your driver will pickup your shipment(s) as usual.

Customers without a Daily Pickup

Schedule a same day or future day Pickup to have a UPS driver pickup all your CampusShip packages. Hand the package to any UPS driver in your area. Take your package to any location of The UPS Store®, UPS Access Point(TM) location, UPS Drop Box, UPS Customer Center, Staples® or Authorized Shipping Outlet near you. Items sent via UPS Return Services (SM) (including via Ground) are also accepted at Drop Boxes. To find the location nearest you, please visit the Resources area of CampusShip and select UPS Locations.

FOLD HERE

JAVIER RODRIGUEZ 3054238509 DLA PIPER LLP (US) 200 SOUTH BISCAYNE BLVD, STE 2 MIAMI FL 33131 UNITED STATES SHIP TO: VANESSA RAMOS/PRIVATE BK OFFICER 3054238509 BANCO LAFISE PISO 37 CALLE 50 EDIF GLOBAL PANAMA CITY PANAM PANAMA	2 LBS SHP #: 0722 VAT3 MZC SHP WT: 2 LBS SHP DWGT: 1 LBS DATE: 24 SEP 2019 DWT: 13,10,1	1 OF 1

UPS SAVER 1P TRACKING #: 1Z 072 2VA 04 9149 6408

EDI-DOC BILLING: P/P DESC: DOCUMENTS
Client Matter (Billable ONLY): 423814-000002 Timekeeper (TK) C/M MUST be Billable TK #: 40108 CS 21.6.37. WTRN050 16.0A 07/2019

Gershoni, Elan

---

From: Rodriguez, Javier
Sent: Tuesday, September 24, 2019 5:42 PM
To: lherrera@lafise.com; abarrera@lafise.com
Cc: Gershoni, Elan; O'Quinn, Ryan
Subject: Account Info: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Attachments: 2019.09.25 - Ltr to Banco LaFise re Foreign Bank Accounts (Account Managers).pdf; DE 139 - 2019.05.14 - Preliminary Injunction (Signed).pdf

Importance: High

Dear Ms. Barrera & Mr. Herrera,

Please find attached correspondence on behalf of our client, Steven Dorfman. The original has also been sent to your office via UPS delivery. Should you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to contact our office.

Sincerely,

Javier Rodriguez
Legal Practice Specialist
T +1 305.423.8542
F +1 305.437.8131
E javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com

DLA Piper LLP (US)
200 South Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33131-5341
United States
www.dlapiper.com

VIA UPS DELIVERY & EMAIL (lherrera@lafise.com & abarrera@lafise.com)

September 25, 2019

Banco LaFise
c/o Ana Carolina Barrera & Luis Herrera
Calle 50 Edif Global
Piso 37
Panama City, Panama
lherrera@lafise.com & abarrera@lafise.com

Re: Bank Name: Banco LaFise
Account Name: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Account No.: [REDACTED]
Account No.: [REDACTED]

All other unknown corporate accounts for which Steven Dorfman has signatory authority.

Dear Ms. Barrera & Mr. Herrera

I am the authorized signatory for the above-referenced accounts. I am also a party in the action commenced by the United States Federal Trade Commission in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Federal Trade Commission v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al, Case No.: 18-cv-62593-GAYLES. On May 14, 2019, the District Judge in my case entered the attached order (the "Preliminary Injunction"). The Preliminary Injunction is a binding Court order that, among other things, requires me to transfer funds held in any accounts outside the United States back to the United States.

In order to comply with my legal obligations under the Preliminary Injunction, I am cooperating with Michael Goldberg, a court-appointed fiduciary, ("Receiver") for Defendants, Simple Health Plans LLC, Health Benefits One LLC, Health Center Management LLC, Innovative Customer Care LLC, Simple Insurance Leads LLC, Senior Benefits One LLC, and each of their subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns (collectively, the "Receivership Defendants").

Please immediately provide me with copies of all account documents for the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, which shall include, but is not limited to:

1. All account opening documents;
2. Bank statements for each account for the period beginning January 1, 2016 through the present;

Banco LaFise
September 25, 2019
Page 2

3. In the event an account is closed or removed, the date the account was closed or removed, the total funds removed in order to close the account, and the name of the person or entity to whom such account or other asset was remitted; and
4. The identification of any safe deposit box, commercial mailbox, or storage facility that is either titled in the name, individually or jointly, of any Receivership Defendant, or is otherwise subject to access by any Receivership Defendant; or for which I have signature authority over.

Additionally, please provide me with copies of all documents needed to transfer funds to the Receiver. Additionally, please accept this letter as my instruction to transfer any and all funds held in the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, to the following account:

Bank: SunTrust Bank
Bank Location: 25 Park Place, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303
Swift Code: [REDACTED] (For International Wires Only)
Credit to: Akerman LLP IOTA Trust Account
Account Number: [REDACTED]
Reference: [REDACTED]

Please contact my attorney Ryan O'Quinn at DLA Piper, LLP (US) should you have any questions. Thank you for your prompt attention to this request.

Documents should be delivered to the following:

Ryan O'Quinn
DLA Piper, LLP
200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33133
Ryan.OQuinn@dlapiper.com
305.423.8553
Counsel to Steve Dorfman

Michael Goldberg,
Akerman LLP
350 East Las Olas Blvd.
Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301
Michael.Goldberg@akerman.com
954.468.2444
Court-Appointed Receiver

Respectfully,

Steven Dorfman

Enclosure – Preliminary Injunction
cc: Michael Goldberg, Receiver

Gershoni, Elan

---

From: Rodriguez, Javier
Sent: Tuesday, September 24, 2019 5:39 PM
To: vmramos@lafise.com
Cc: Gershoni, Elan; O'Quinn, Ryan
Subject: Account Info: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Attachments: 2019.09.25 - Ltr to Banco LaFise re Foreign Bank Accounts (V. Ramos).pdf; DE 139 - 2019.05.14 - Preliminary Injunction (Signed).pdf

Importance: High

Dear Ms. Ramos,

Please find attached correspondence on behalf of our client, Steven Dorfman. The original has also been sent to your office via UPS delivery. Should you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to contact our office.

Sincerely,

Javier Rodriguez
Legal Practice Specialist
T +1 305.423.8542
F +1 305.437.8131
E javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com

DLA Piper LLP (US)
200 South Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33131-5341
United States
www.dlapiper.com

VIA UPS DELIVERY & EMAIL (vmramos@lafise.com)

September 25, 2019

Banco LaFise
c/o Vanessa Ramos, Private Banking Officer
Calle 50 Edif Global
Piso 37
Panama City, Panama
vmramos@lafise.com

Re: Bank Name: Banco LaFise
Account Name: Health Benefits Center, Corp.
Account No.: [REDACTED]
Account No.: [REDACTED]

All other unknown corporate accounts for which Steven Dorfman has signatory authority.

Dear Ms. Ramos:

I am the authorized signatory for the above-referenced accounts. I am also a party in the action commenced by the United States Federal Trade Commission in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, Federal Trade Commission v. Simple Health Plans LLC, et al, Case No.: 18-cv-62593-GAYLES. On May 14, 2019, the District Judge in my case entered the attached order (the "Preliminary Injunction"). The Preliminary Injunction is a binding Court order that, among other things, requires me to transfer funds held in any accounts outside the United States back to the United States.

In order to comply with my legal obligations under the Preliminary Injunction, I am cooperating with Michael Goldberg, a court-appointed fiduciary, ("Receiver") for Defendants, Simple Health Plans LLC, Health Benefits One LLC, Health Center Management LLC, Innovative Customer Care LLC, Simple Insurance Leads LLC, Senior Benefits One LLC, and each of their subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns (collectively, the "Receivership Defendants").

Please immediately provide me with copies of all account documents for the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, which shall include, but is not limited to:

1. All account opening documents;
2. Bank statements for each account for the period beginning January 1, 2016 through the present;

Banco LaFise
September 25, 2019
Page 2

3. In the event an account is closed or removed, the date the account was closed or removed, the total funds removed in order to close the account, and the name of the person or entity to whom such account or other asset was remitted; and
4. The identification of any safe deposit box, commercial mailbox, or storage facility that is either titled in the name, individually or jointly, of any Receivership Defendant, or is otherwise subject to access by any Receivership Defendant; or for which I have signature authority over.

Additionally, please provide me with copies of all documents needed to transfer funds to the Receiver. Additionally, please accept this letter as my instruction to transfer any and all funds held in the above-referenced accounts, including any other corporate account not listed above to which I am a signatory, to the following account:

Bank: SunTrust Bank
Bank Location: 25 Park Place, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303
Swift Code: [REDACTED] (For International Wires Only)
Credit to: Akerman LLP IOTA Trust Account
Account Number: [REDACTED]
Reference: [REDACTED]

Please contact my attorney Ryan O'Quinn at DLA Piper, LLP (US) should you have any questions. Thank you for your prompt attention to this request.

Documents should be delivered to the following:

Ryan O'Quinn
DLA Piper, LLP
200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33133
Ryan.OQuinn@dlapiper.com
305.423.8553
Counsel to Steve Dorfman

Michael Goldberg,
Akerman LLP
350 East Las Olas Blvd.
Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33301
Michael.Goldberg@akerman.com
954.468.2444
Court-Appointed Receiver

Respectfully,

Steven Dorfman

Enclosure – Preliminary Injunction
cc: Michael Goldberg, Receiver

EXHIBIT B

Gershoni, Elan

---

From: Gershoni, Elan
Sent: Friday, October 18, 2019 8:21 AM
To: naim.surgeon@akerman.com; escott@ftc.gov
Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan; Rodriguez, Javier; michael.goldberg@akerman.com; joan.levit@akerman.com; JDAVIS@ftc.gov; JWEI@ftc.gov
Subject: RE: Simple Health; FTC's and Receiver's Response in Opposition to Motion for Continued Allowance

Good Morning Naim,

We advised you on September 24, 2019 that we located online credentials for the Popular account. This is the first time anyone from your team (or the FTC) has requested them and we are happy to provide them. The website for the account is: [REDACTED] The company username is [REDACTED] the username is [REDACTED] and the password is [REDACTED]

Note that we have not been able to identify Lafise credentials nor have we received any responses to the multiple letters we sent to Popular or Lafise that you were cc'd to requesting that they send us account documents and wire all funds to the Receiver's account. You and the FTC keep insisting that Mr. Dorfman can do more to obtain the requested documents and have the funds wired to the Receiver. However, neither the Receiver nor the FTC has identified with any specificity what additional steps he can take to effectuate our shared goals. Further, Mr. Dorfman has complied with each request that either the FTC or Receiver has made in that regard. The circular logic that Mr. Dorfman is not complying with the PI because the banks have not sent him the requested documents or wired any funds to the Receiver's account is overly-simplistic. If the Receiver would like to pay for Mr. Dorfman to travel with counsel to Panama and the Dominican Republic to attempt to obtain these records in person, we will also entertain that option. If you have additional suggestions as to how we can work to obtain the account documents or facilitate the wires, please let us know

Thanks.

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567
E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

---

From: naim.surgeon@akerman.com <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>
Sent: Thursday, October 17, 2019 7:58 PM
To: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>; escott@ftc.gov
Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>; michael.goldberg@akerman.com; joan.levit@akerman.com; JDAVIS@ftc.gov; JWEI@ftc.gov
Subject: RE: Simple Health; FTC's and Receiver's Response in Opposition to Motion for Continued Allowance

[EXTERNAL]

---

Elan,

I have discussed each of the emails you sent with the Receiver. The fact that Mr. Dorfman provided Form 4506 is an oversight and we will correct our filing as to that issue by close of business tomorrow. Beyond that, we will not withdraw the remainder of our argument.

It is our position that the TRO and certainly the PI impose an affirmative obligation on Mr. Dorfman to make the efforts that are required by the PI to provide a full and complete picture of his financial circumstances along with taking any steps to obtain information about any and all foreign assets. To the extent that Simple Health's corporate records were required to satisfy that obligation, we have repeatedly and consistently made ourselves available so that those records could have been obtained in the months leading up to the entry of the PI and the five months that have passed since the PI was entered.

When the Receiver agreed to work with Mr. Dorfman to satisfy his obligations in an effort to obviate the need for the FTC to seek an order of contempt, we candidly discussed our inability to obtain records and information about the foreign accounts despite the fact that our office provided the lawyers and entities with copies of the PI authorizing the Receiver to take the steps described therein. Contrary to Mr. Dorfman's claims, and as the FTC has noted in its email response, Mr. Dorfman opened these accounts and ostensibly has access to them as a result. It is evident that Mr. Dorfman can obtain some sort of access from the spreadsheets you provided for the account held at Banco Popular by Soluciones Omfri. Even so, we have not seen the account opening documents or statements that were also requested. And, although Mr. Dorfman was apparently able to obtain access to the accounts to supply the spreadsheets, none of the access credentials were provided to the Receiver's office nor was any effort made to put the Receiver in a position to interact with the bank directly on these issues once some form of contact occurred.

As a signatory to the account, it seems fairly straightforward that Mr. Dorfman can make the effort to determine what is required of Banco Popular to place the Receiver in control of the accounts held by Soluciones Omfri and/or transfer those funds to the Receiver. By the same token, that effort can also be made with respect to the Panamanian accounts given that Mr. Dorfman exercises control over these accounts and no information has been provided that would suggest otherwise. If, as you suggest, the Banco Lafise account was wound down, which we are hearing for the first time, then records should be able to be obtained from the bank or identified among Simple Health's corporate records as evidence of that. Again, these are Mr. Dorfman's obligations and as you note the Receiver has not objected to Mr. Dorfman going to these institutions directly to obtain this information. The Receiver has been and remains willing to cooperate in any manner that assists Mr. Dorfman with satisfying his obligations under the PI, but we cannot take those steps for Mr. Dorfman, particularly when we have indicated that our attempts to obtain information on our own has been blocked.

It is our position that Mr. Dorfman has not fully complied with the requirements of the PI on these issues and that his obligation to do so requires more than a good try given that he is uniquely positioned to obtain the information that is being sought.

Thank you,

Naim

Naim Surgeon

Partner

Akerman LLP | 98 Southeast Seventh Street, Suite 1100 | Miami, FL 33131

D: 305 982 5679 | F: 305 349 4654

Admitted to Practice in NY, NJ, and FL

naim.surgeon@akerman.com

vCard | Profile

akerman

700+ Lawyers

25 Offices

akerman.com

CONFIDENTIALITY NOTE: The information contained in this transmission may be privileged and confidential, and is intended only for the use of the individual or entity named above. If the reader of this message is not the intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any dissemination, distribution or copying of this communication is strictly prohibited. If you have received this transmission in error, please immediately reply to the sender that you have received this communication in error and then delete it. Thank you.

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com>

Sent: Thursday, October 17, 2019 7:11 AM

To: Scott, Elizabeth C. <escott@ftc.gov>; Surgeon, Naim (Ptnr-Mia) <naim.surgeon@akerman.com>

Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <javier.rodriguez@dlapiper.com>; Goldberg, Michael (Ptnr-Ftl) <michael.goldberg@akerman.com>; Levit, Joan (OC-Ftl) <joan.levit@akerman.com>; Davis, James <JDAVIS@ftc.gov>; Wei, Joannie <JWEI@ftc.gov>

Subject: RE: Simple Health; FTC's and Receiver's Response in Opposition to Motion for Continued Allowance

All, the Receiver's motion also represents to the Court that Mr. Dorfman has not provided the FTC with IRS 4506 Forms. That is wrong and a misrepresentation to the Court. In fact, Mr. Dorfman provided these forms to the FTC in the attached email on September 12, 2019. The Receiver and his counsel were both cc'd to that correspondence.

It is frankly shocking that the FTC and Receiver's counsel would make these representations to the Court. We strongly urge you to consider filing amended motions to correct the record and withdraw the blatant misrepresentations discussed herein and below.

Again, if there are any outstanding steps we can take to help you identify additional assets or repatriate them, do not hesitate to let us know how we can help.

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567
E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

---

From: Gershoni, Elan <Elan.Gershoni@us.dlapiper.com>
Sent: Wednesday, October 16, 2019 9:05 PM
To: Scott, Elizabeth C. <escott@ftc.gov>; naim.surgeon@akerman.com
Cc: O'Quinn, Ryan <ryan.oquinn@us.dlapiper.com>; Rodriguez, Javier <Javier.Rodriguez@us.dlapiper.com>;
michael.goldberg@akerman.com; joan.levit@akerman.com; Davis, James <JDAVIS@ftc.gov>; Wei, Joannie
<JWEI@ftc.gov>
Subject: Simple Health; FTC's and Receiver's Response in Opposition to Motion for Continued Allowance

Libby and Naim,

Your responses [DE 220 and 219, respectively] to Mr. Dorfman's motion to continue his monthly allowance [DE 214] represent to the Court that Mr. Dorfman has intentionally failed to (i) disclose all assets located abroad in which he has an interest in and (ii) repatriate those assets to the Receiver's control. These are blatant misrepresentations to the Court.

I will give you the benefit of the doubt that you may have forgotten our numerous conversations and correspondences on this topic as recently as three weeks ago. The only foreign assets in which Mr. Dorfman may have any interest in, that Mr. Dorfman is aware of, are two bank accounts for Simple Health's foreign affiliate call centers: (i) an account at Banco Lafise in Panama for Health Benefits Center Corp.; and (ii) an account at Banco Popular in the Dominican Republic for Soluciones Omfri.

In his role at Simple Health, Mr. Dorfman was not responsible for managing the company's finances, let alone the accounts of the foreign call center affiliates that Simple Health used. We are confident that if you conduct an even brief review of the defendants' records, including emails, in the Receiver's possession you will see that other employees at Simple Health and the other corporate defendants were primarily responsible for managing those accounts. Accordingly, Mr. Dorfman did not even recall the existence of those accounts when completing his financial disclosures and it was a surprise to him that they existed when the FTC identified them. However, it should not be a surprise to the FTC or Receiver that an individual with upwards of 100 employees at one time in numerous companies is not responsible for managing and tracking the numerous accounts associated with these companies. The task of identifying any foreign assets is made all the more difficult since Mr. Dorfman has not had access to the corporate records since the FTC initiated this proceeding.

To insinuate that Mr. Dorfman in some way tried to hide those assets from the FTC or Receiver or wrongfully transfer them is simply unsupported by any evidence. Indeed, it appears that the Banco Lafise account was entirely wound down months before the FTC even initiated this action. Further, it appears that the Banco Popular account has approximately $24,000 in it, which balance has not gone down in the months preceding this action.

As soon as the FTC identified these accounts to Mr. Dorfman, Mr. Dorfman did exactly what the FTC requested: he worked with the Receiver to identify the extent of those assets and repatriate them to the Receiver's account. We issued letters, largely drafted by the Receiver's counsel, to Banco Popular and Banco Lafise requesting all records for the respective accounts and to have any remaining funds in those accounts wired to the Receiver's account. That process was driven by and overseen by the Receiver's counsel and we did exactly as asked – the attached correspondences indisputably evidence that. Needless to say, we have not received any responses from these banks.

We have unequivocally done everything that the FTC and Receiver have asked us to do with respect to identifying and repatriating these assets. However, the fact that the assets from the Banco Popular account have not yet been transferred to the Receiver's account is not Mr. Dorfman's fault. We are open to suggestions as to what else we can do to help facilitate the transfer to the Receiver's account and are committed to complying with the Court's orders. However, the FTC and Receiver should not mistake (and mislead the Court) that the fact that the funds have not been transferred to the Receiver's account is due to Mr. Dorfman's lack of effort, let alone lack of compliance with the Receiver's requests.

We are giving each of you the opportunity to withdraw and refile your responses to remove the identified misrepresentations to the Court. Even zealous advocacy has ethical limits. We will not object to the renewed responses as untimely if they are refiled by October 18, 2019.

Again, Mr. Dorfman is committed to complying with the Court's orders. If there are any additional foreign assets that you are aware of or can think of any additional steps Mr. Dorfman can try to repatriate any identified foreign assets, please do not hesitate to let us know how we can help.

Thank you.

Best,

Elan A. Gershoni

T +1 305.423.8567

F +1 305.675.0527

E elan.gershoni@dlapiper.com

DLA Piper LLP (US)
200 South Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 2500
Miami, FL 33131-5341
United States
www.dlapiper.com

The information contained in this email may be confidential and/or legally privileged. It has been sent for the sole use of the intended recipient(s). If the reader of this message is not an intended recipient, you are hereby notified that any unauthorized review, use, disclosure, dissemination, distribution, or copying of this communication, or any of its contents, is strictly prohibited. If you have received this communication in error, please reply to the sender and destroy all copies of the message. To contact us directly, send to postmaster@dlapiper.com. Thank you.

EXHIBIT C

937 F.3d 764

United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Plaintiff-Appellee,
v.
CREDIT BUREAU CENTER, LLC, and Michael Brown, Defendants-Appellants.

Nos. 18-2847 &amp; 18-3310

|
Argued April 17, 2019

|
Decided August 21, 2019

Synopsis

Background: Federal Trade Commission (FTC) brought action alleging that credit-monitoring service and its principal violated Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) and Restore Online Shopper Confidence Act (ROSCA) by operating websites offering free credit report and score without disclosing that applying for that “free” information automatically enrolled customers in unspecified monthly membership subscription. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, No. 17 C 194, Matthew F. Kennelly, J., 325 F.Supp.3d 852, entered summary judgment in FTC's favor, and defendants appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Sykes, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] FTCA does not authorize restitutionary relief, overruling FTC v. Amy Travel Service, Inc., 875 F.2d 564;

[2] principal was individually liable under FTCA for contractors' fraudulent marketing scheme; and

[3] permanent injunction was not “fine” subject to Excessive Fines Clause.

Affirmed in part and vacated in part.

Wood, Chief Judge, dissented from denial of rehearing en banc and filed opinion in which Rovner and Hamilton, Circuit Judges, joined.

West Headnotes (18)

[1] Courts

🔑 Supreme Court decisions

Stare decisis cannot justify adherence to approach that Supreme Court precedent forecloses.

[2] Antitrust and Trade Regulation

🔑 Particular cases

Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) provision authorizing Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to seek temporary restraining orders and permanent injunctions in federal court to enjoin violations of federal trade law does not authorize restitutionary relief, overruling FTC v. Amy Travel Service, Inc., 875 F.2d 564. Federal Trade Commission Act § 13, 15 U.S.C.A. § 53(b).

[3] Federal Courts

🔑 Summary judgment

Federal Courts

🔑 Summary judgment

Court of Appeals reviews summary judgment de novo, viewing evidence in light most favorable to non-movant and drawing reasonable inferences in his favor.

[4] Federal Courts

🔑 Injunction

Court of Appeals reviews judge's decision to enter permanent injunction for abuse of discretion.

[5] Federal Courts

🔑 Questions of Law in General

Court of Appeals reviews legal questions de novo.

[6] Antitrust and Trade Regulation*🔑 Persons liable

To impose individual liability under Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) on basis of corporate practice, Federal Trade Commission (FTC) must prove that: (1) practice violated FTCA; (2) individual either participated directly in deceptive acts or practices or had authority to control them; and (3) individual knew or should have known about deceptive practices. Federal Trade Commission Act § 13, 15 U.S.C.A. § 53\(b\).

[7] Antitrust and Trade Regulation*🔑 Persons liable

Credit-monitoring service's principal was individually liable under Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) for contractors' fraudulent marketing scheme, pursuant to which they posted advertisements for nonexistent rental properties on website, then instructed interested parties to obtain ostensibly "free" credit report and score from service's websites, which then automatically enrolled them in unspecified monthly membership subscription, where principal controlled websites and was aware of their content, and websites did not tell consumers that they were enrolling in credit-monitoring service, in violation of Restore Online Shopper Confidence Act (ROSCA). Federal Trade Commission Act § 5, 15 U.S.C.A. § 45\(a\); 15 U.S.C.A. § 8403; 16 C.F.R. § 310.2\(w\).

[8] Antitrust and Trade Regulation*🔑 Penalties and Fines*Fines*🔑 Excessive fines

Permanent injunction imposing extensive requirements on credit-monitoring service's principal pursuant to Federal Trade Commission Act (FTCA) if he ever operated credit-monitoring business again was not "fine" subject to Excessive Fines Clause. U.S. Const. Amend.

8; Federal Trade Commission Act § 13, 15 U.S.C.A. § 53\(b\).

[9] Fines*🔑 Excessive fines

For Eighth Amendment purposes, "fines" are limited to cash or in-kind payments imposed by and payable to government. U.S. Const. Amend. 8.

[10] Injunction*🔑 Scope of Relief in General

Statutory authorizations for injunctions do not encompass other discrete forms of equitable relief like restitution.

[11] Statutes*🔑 Express mention and implied exclusion; *expressio unius est exclusio alterius

Where Congress includes particular language in one section of statute but omits it in another section of same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in disparate inclusion or exclusion.

[12] Statutes*🔑 Effect of severability clause

Court cannot read saving clause to allow specific provisions of statute that contains it to be nullified.

[13] Courts*🔑 Decisions of Same Court or Co-Ordinate Court

Although Court of Appeals must give considerable weight to its prior decisions, it is not bound by them absolutely and may overturn circuit precedent for compelling reasons.

[14] Courts

2019-2 Trade Cases P 80,883

🔑 Decisions of Same Court or Co-Ordinate Court

Intervening Supreme Court decision that displaces rationale of circuit precedent is one reason for overturning precedent.

[15] Statutes

🔑 Remedial statutes

Congress, not judiciary, controls scope of remedial relief when statute provides cause of action.

[16] Federal Courts

🔑 Equity jurisdiction in general

When public interest is involved in proceeding, court's equitable powers assume even broader and more flexible character than when only private controversy is at stake.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Statutes

🔑 Intent

Where Congress has provided elaborate enforcement provisions for remedying violation of federal statute, it cannot be assumed that Congress intended to authorize by implication additional judicial remedies.

[18] Courts

🔑 Construction and operation of statutes

As important as stare decisis is, it is equally important for court to respect statutes that Congress has passed and to correct any problems it sees in its prior interpretations of those statutes.

*766 Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 17 C 194 — Matthew F. Kennelly, Judge.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Michael D. Bergman, Joel Marcus, Attorneys, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Office of the General Counsel, Washington, DC, Guy G. Ward, Attorney, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Chicago, IL, for Plaintiff-Appellee.

Stephen R. Cochell, Attorney, THE COCHELL LAW FIRM, P.C., Houston, TX, for Defendants-Appellants.

Before Manion, Sykes, and Brennan, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

Sykes, Circuit Judge.

Michael Brown is the sole owner and operator of Credit Bureau Center, a credit-monitoring service. (We refer to both collectively as “Brown.”) Brown’s websites used what’s known as a “negative option feature” to attract customers. The websites offered a “free credit report and score” while obscuring a key detail in much smaller text: that applying for this “free” information automatically enrolled customers in an unspecified $29.94 monthly “membership” subscription. The subscription was for Brown’s credit-monitoring service, but customers learned this information only when he sent them a letter after they were automatically enrolled. Brown’s most successful contractor capitalized on the confusion by posting Craigslist advertisements for fake rental properties and telling applicants to get a “free” credit score from Brown’s websites.

The Federal Trade Commission eventually took notice. It sued Brown under section 13(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (“FTCA”), 15 U.S.C. § 53(b), alleging that the websites and referral system violated several consumer-protection statutes. The Commission sought a permanent injunction and restitution. Relevant here, the district judge found that Brown was a principal for his contractor’s fraudulent scheme and that the websites failed to meet certain disclosure requirements in the Restore Online Shopper Confidence Act (“ROSCA”). Id. § 8403. The judge entered a permanent injunction and ordered Brown to pay more than $5 million in restitution to the Commission.

Brown now concedes liability as a principal for his contractor’s Craigslist scam. *767 And he doesn’t dispute that his own websites failed to meet some of ROSCA’s disclosure requirements. So we have no trouble affirming the judge’s decision to hold him liable for both. We also affirm the issuance of a permanent injunction. Brown’s argument there rests on an erroneous understanding of the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause.

But the restitution award is a different matter. By its terms, section 13(b) authorizes only restraining orders and injunctions. But the Commission has long viewed it as also authorizing awards of restitution. We endorsed that starkly atextual interpretation three decades ago in FTC v. Amy Travel Service, Inc., 875 F.2d 564, 571 (7th Cir. 1989). Since Amy Travel, the Supreme Court has clarified that courts must consider whether an implied equitable remedy is compatible with a statute's express remedial scheme. See Meghrig v. KFC W., Inc., 516 U.S. 479, 487–88, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 134 L.Ed.2d 121 (1996). And it has specifically instructed us not to assume that a statute with "elaborate enforcement provisions" implicitly authorizes other remedies. Id. at 487, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

Applying Meghrig's instructions, we conclude that section 13(b)'s grant of authority to order injunctive relief does not implicitly authorize an award of restitution. Every reason Meghrig gave for not finding an implied monetary remedy applies here. Most notably, the FTCA has two detailed remedial provisions that expressly authorize restitution if the Commission follows certain procedures. Our current reading of section 13(b) allows the Commission to circumvent these elaborate enforcement provisions and seek restitution directly through an implied remedy.

[1] [2] Stare decisis cannot justify adherence to an approach that Supreme Court precedent forecloses. Accordingly, we overrule Amy Travel and hold that section 13(b) does not authorize restitutionary relief.<sup>1</sup> Because the Commission brought this case under section 13(b), we vacate the restitution award.

I. Background

In January 2014 Brown contracted with Danny Pierce to direct customers to his credit-monitoring service. Brown gave Pierce several functionally identical websites with names like "eFreeScore.com" and "FreeCreditNation.com" to use for referrals. As their names suggest, these websites invited people to sign up for a "free credit report and score." But signing up for the free score also automatically enrolled applicants in Brown's credit-monitoring service, which charged a monthly subscription fee.

Brown didn't tell prospective customers about the credit-monitoring service. His websites almost entirely focused on the free credit score and report. Three disclaimers, buried in much smaller font, told consumers that applying for the free offer also enrolled them in an unspecified "membership" subscription that cost $29.94 each month. Customers later learned that this subscription was for credit monitoring when Brown sent them a letter after the automatic enrollment.

Pierce did nothing to clear up this confusion. Indeed, it's undisputed that his method for drumming up referrals was fraudulent. He subcontracted with Andrew Lloyd, who posted Craigslist advertisements for nonexistent rental properties at bargain prices. Lloyd invited prospective tenants to email the landlord. Posing as *768 the "landlord," he then responded and instructed them to obtain a credit report and score through one of Brown's websites. But once applicants got this "free" information—and were automatically enrolled in the credit-monitoring service—Lloyd stopped replying to emails.

The plan was effective. Pierce quickly became Brown's most successful recruiter. Over the course of their relationship, Pierce referred more than 2.7 million customers to Brown, generating just over $6.8 million in revenue. Unsuspecting customers were understandably upset. They flooded Brown's customer-service operators, questioning the monthly subscription charge. They complained that the Craigslist advertisements were scams. And many were blindsided by the fact that requesting a free credit score automatically enrolled them in a costly credit-monitoring service. Brown told his customer-service team to deny any involvement with Pierce's operation. And although Brown typically agreed to cancel future charges, he often refused to issue refunds. He also instructed his representatives to offer reduced prices to retain customers. Some customers accepted the offer, but others told their credit-card companies to cancel Brown's charges. Credit-card companies cancelled more than 10,000 of Brown's charges.

Consumers complained to the Commission, which opened an investigation. In January 2017 it sued Brown under section 13(b) of the FTCA seeking an injunction and restitution. The Commission alleged that the Craigslist advertisements violated the FTCA's prohibition on "unfair or deceptive acts or practices." 15 U.S.C. § 45(a). The suit also alleged that Brown's websites violated the same provision of the FTCA, as well as ROSCA, id. § 8403; the Fair Credit Reporting Act ("FCRA"), id. § 1681j(g); and the Free Credit Reports Rule, 12 C.F.R. §§ 1022.130–138.

On the Commission's motion, the judge issued a temporary injunction, froze Brown's assets, and appointed a receiver to manage his company. Brown and the Commission later filed cross-motions for summary judgment. In addition to contesting liability, Brown argued that section 13(b) doesn't authorize an award of restitution and, alternatively, that it doesn't authorize penalties or legal restitution (as opposed to equitable restitution, which requires tracing a plaintiff's entitlement to a particular account or fund).

The judge ruled for the Commission across the board, holding that Brown violated the FTCA as a principal for the Craigslist scheme and that the websites violated the FTCA, ROSCA, the FCRA, and the Free Credit Reports Rule. The judge issued a permanent injunction that imposed extensive conditions on Brown's continued involvement in the credit-monitoring industry and ordered Brown to pay $5,260,671.36 in restitution. He also denied Brown's motion to unfreeze funds to pay his attorneys.

II. Discussion

[3] [4] [5] Brown contests his liability, the permanent injunction, and the restitution award. Different standards of review apply. For liability, we review the summary judgment de novo, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Brown and drawing reasonable inferences in his favor. Holloway v. Soo Line R.R. Co., 916 F.3d 641, 643 (7th Cir. 2019). We review the judge's decision to enter a permanent injunction for abuse of discretion. SEC v. Yang, 795 F.3d 674, 681 (7th Cir. 2015). Finally, Brown's challenge to the restitution award raises legal questions, which we review de novo. Breisen v. Motorola, Inc., 656 F.3d 701, 704 (7th Cir. 2011).

*769 A. Liability Issues

[6] The Commission sued under section 13(b) of the FTCA, which by its terms authorizes temporary restraining orders and permanent injunctions to enjoin violations of federal trade law. § 53(b)(1). To impose individual liability on the basis of a corporate practice, the Commission must prove (1) that the practice violated the FTCA; (2) that the individual "either participated directly in the deceptive acts or practices or had authority to control them"; and (3) that the individual "knew or should have known about the deceptive practices." FTC v. World Media Brokers, 415 F.3d 758, 764 (7th Cir. 2005).

Based on the summary-judgment record, the judge held that Brown violated the FTCA as a principal for the Craigslist marketing scheme contrived by Pierce and Lloyd. He also held that Brown's websites violated the FTCA, ROSCA, the FCRA, and the Free Credit Reports Rule. Finally, the judge concluded that Brown was individually liable for the violations because he owned and operated all aspects of his company.

While Brown concedes liability for the Craigslist scheme, he challenges his liability for the website violations. He asserts that his websites contained no misrepresentations in violation of the FTCA and satisfied ROSCA's disclosure requirements. He also argues that the Commission must enforce the FCRA and the Free Credit Reports Rule through an internal adjudication. See 15 U.S.C. § 1681s(a)(1) (stating that FCRA violations "shall be subject to enforcement by the Federal Trade Commission under section 5(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act").

It's unnecessary to consider every theory of liability. Brown's challenges to the injunction and restitution award do not turn on which statute his websites violated. And section 13(b) permits the Commission to seek relief against Brown for violating "any provision of law" it enforces. § 53(b).

So we start and end with ROSCA, which restricts the use of a "negative option feature" to sell goods or services on the Internet. § 8403. A negative-option feature is "a provision [in an offer] under which the customer's silence or failure to take an affirmative action to reject goods or services or to cancel the agreement is interpreted by the seller as acceptance of the offer." 16 C.F.R. § 310.2(w); see also § 8403 (incorporating this definition by reference). ROSCA prohibits this feature unless the seller "(1) provides text that clearly and conspicuously discloses all material terms of the transaction before obtaining the consumer's billing information; (2) obtains a consumer's express informed consent before charging the consumer ...; and (3) provides simple mechanisms for a consumer to stop recurring charges." § 8403. ROSCA violations are "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" under the FTCA, so the Commission can use the FTCA's enforcement regime against violators. Id. § 8404.

There's no dispute that Brown used a negative-option feature to enroll customers in his credit-monitoring service. The only question is whether he complied with ROSCA's disclosure requirements. In the apt words of the district judge, Brown's websites were “virtually devoid of any mention of the [credit-monitoring] service aside from the statement that the customer is to be billed for it.” Moreover, Brown concealed this incomplete disclosure behind more prominent language offering a free credit score and report. The judge determined that these partial and obscure disclosures did not “clearly and conspicuously disclose[ ] all material terms of the transaction” or ensure that customers gave “express informed consent.” § 8403(1)–(2).

*770 Brown focuses on the conclusion that the disclosures weren’t conspicuous. He parses font sizes, details his websites’ color schemes, and takes a microscope to the Commission’s affidavits in an effort to highlight evidence that consumers read and understood the disclosures. But he gives only passing attention to the decisive point: His websites didn’t provide certain information that ROSCA requires—namely, that the subscription was for a credit-monitoring service.

[7] This oversight is fatal to Brown’s defense. Setting aside whether his disclosures satisfied the “clear and conspicuous” standard (and on that point we see nothing unsound in the judge’s ruling that they did not), Brown violated ROSCA if the disclosures failed to provide “all material terms of the transaction.” § 8403(1). The service Brown provided in exchange for the subscription is clearly a material term. See Material Term, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014) (“A contractual provision dealing with a significant issue such as subject matter ... or the work to be done.”). And the websites did not tell consumers that they were enrolling in a credit-monitoring service. Brown seeks refuge in the form letter that he delivered to new subscribers, which did provide this information. But ROSCA required Brown to disclose the material terms “before obtaining the consumer’s billing information.” § 8403. Brown protests that he sent the letter “almost instantaneously” upon subscription. But almost instantaneously is still too late under ROSCA.

Brown next contends that even if corporate liability is established, he should not be held personally liable. But it’s undisputed that he controlled the websites and was aware of their content. That’s enough to establish personal liability for the ROSCA violations.

B. The Permanent Injunction

The judge held that Brown’s conduct warranted a permanent injunction, applying our standard under the Securities and Exchange Act. See Yang, 795 F.3d at 681 (asking whether “there is a reasonable likelihood of future violations in order to obtain [injunctive] relief”) (quotation marks omitted). The ensuing injunction imposes extensive requirements on Brown if he ever operates a credit-monitoring business again.

[8] [9] We don’t need to decide whether our standard for an injunction under the Securities and Exchange Act also applies to section 13(b) because Brown’s challenge doesn’t turn on that question. His attack on the injunction rests largely on the Excessive Fines Clause. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII. He contends that the injunction is unconstitutionally harsh and disproportionate. But he skips a necessary step in the analysis—whether the injunction is a “fine” at all. It’s not. The Supreme Court has limited “fines” to “cash [or] in-kind payment[s] imposed by and payable to the government.” Dep’t of Hous. & Urban Dev. v. Rucker, 535 U.S. 125, 136 n.6, 122 S.Ct. 1230, 152 L.Ed.2d 258 (2002) (quotation marks omitted); see also Zamora-Mallari v. Mukasey, 514 F.3d 679, 695 (7th Cir. 2008) (“The Board’s removal order ... is not a ‘fine,’ and thus the Excessive Fine Clause of the Eighth Amendment does not apply.”). Because an injunction isn’t a fine, the permanent injunction doesn’t implicate the Excessive Fines Clause.

Brown also offers an assortment of drive-by arguments, all of which are too undeveloped to establish an abuse of discretion. See Roger Whitmore’s Auto. Serv., Inc. v. Lake County, 424 F.3d 659, 664 n.2 (7th Cir. 2005) (“It is the parties’ duty to package, present, and support their arguments *771 ....”). We affirm the permanent injunction.

C. The Restitution Award

The bulk of Brown’s appeal challenges the restitution order. His primary argument is that section 13(b) does not authorize an award of restitution. This is fundamentally a question of statutory interpretation, but it’s obscured by layers of caselaw, so bear with us while we untangle the knot. A brief overview of the FTCA’s remedial structure is helpful to a proper understanding of section 13(b), so we begin there.

The FTCA gives the Commission several tools to enforce the Act’s prohibition on unfair or deceptive trade practices. Under its “cease and desist” power, the Commission adjudicates a case before an administrative law judge, who can issue an order prohibiting the respondent from engaging in the illegal conduct at issue. See 15 U.S.C. § 45(b). This order becomes final if it survives administrative appeal and judicial review. Id. § 45(g).

A final cease-and-desist order empowers the Commission to sue the violator for legal and equitable relief, but only if “a reasonable man would have known under the circumstances [that the conduct] was dishonest or fraudulent.” Id. § 57b(a)(2), (b). After it becomes final, the order also draws a line in the sand for both the respondent and anyone else who engages in the prohibited conduct. If the respondent later violates the order, the Commission can sue for civil penalties and any equitable relief “the court finds necessary.” Id. § 45(l). If anyone else engages in the prohibited conduct after the order becomes final, the Commission can seek civil penalties if it can prove that the violator acted with “actual knowledge” that his conduct was unlawful. Id. § 45(m)(1)(B).

The Commission has two other enforcement mechanisms at its disposal. First, it can promulgate rules that “define with specificity acts or practices which are unfair or deceptive.” Id. § 57a(a)(1)(B). By preemptively resolving whether certain conduct violates the FTCA, rulemaking permits the Commission to pursue “quick enforcement” actions against violators. Nicholas R. Parrillo, Federal Agency Guidance and the Power to Bind: An Empirical Study of Agencies and Industries, 36 YALE J. ON REG. 165, 225–26 (2019). Once the Commission promulgates a rule, it can seek legal and equitable remedies, including restitution, from violators. See 15 U.S.C. § 57b(a)(1), (b). And if it establishes that a violator had “actual knowledge or knowledge fairly implied on the basis of objective circumstances” that his conduct violated a rule, the Commission can also pursue civil penalties. Id. § 45(m)(1)(A).

The Commission’s remaining enforcement mechanism is different. Under section 13(b) of the FTCA, the Commission can forego any administrative adjudication or rulemaking and directly pursue a temporary restraining order and a preliminary or permanent injunction in federal court. § 53(b). As noted, the Commission sued Brown under this provision.

1. Section 13(b)

The restitution order against Brown rests on section 13(b)’s permanent-injunction provision, which states that “in proper cases the Commission may seek, and after proper proof, the court may issue, a permanent injunction.” Id. Brown’s straightforward argument is that section 13(b) doesn’t authorize restitution because it doesn’t mention restitution.

[10] We start with the obvious: Restitution isn’t an injunction. “Injunction” is of course a broad term. See Injunction, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014)

(“A *772 court order commanding or preventing an action.”). But statutory authorizations for injunctions don’t encompass other discrete forms of equitable relief like restitution. See, e.g., Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 484, 116 S.Ct. 1251 (“[N]either [a mandatory or prohibitory injunction] contemplates ... equitable restitution.”) (quotation marks omitted); Owner-Operator Indep. Drivers Ass’n v. Landstar Sys., Inc., 622 F.3d 1307, 1324 (11th Cir. 2010) (“Injunctive relief constitutes a distinct type of equitable relief; it is not an umbrella term that encompasses restitution or disgorgement.”); see also Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 365, 131 S.Ct. 2541, 180 L.Ed.2d 374 (2011) (holding that an equitable order for backpay isn’t an injunction); Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 430, 129 S.Ct. 1749, 173 L.Ed.2d 550 (2009) (“Whether [a deportation stay] might technically be called an injunction is beside the point; that is not the label by which it is generally known.”).

The Commission doesn’t seriously argue otherwise. It instead contends that section 13(b) implicitly authorizes restitution. We endorsed that reading in Amy Travel, 875 F.2d at 571, which Brown asks us to overturn. We’ll discuss Amy Travel in a moment, but we begin with a closer look at the FTCA itself. If the Commission’s reading is correct, there’s no need to reconsider our precedent.

Section 13(b) provides:

Whenever the Commission has reason to believe--

- (1) that any person, partnership, or corporation is violating, or is about to violate, any provision of law enforced by the Federal Trade Commission, and
- (2) that the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or until the order of the Commission made thereon has become final, would be in the interest of the public-- the Commission ... may bring suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin any such act or practice. Upon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission’s likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest, and after notice to the defendant, a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction may be granted without bond: Provided, however, That if a complaint is not filed within such period (not exceeding 20 days) as may be specified by the court after issuance of the temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction, the order or injunction shall be dissolved by the court and be of no further force and effect: Provided further, That in proper cases the Commission may seek, and after proper proof, the court may issue, a permanent injunction. ...

An implied restitution remedy doesn't sit comfortably with the text of section 13(b). Consider its requirement that the defendant must be "violating" or "about to violate" the law. Requiring ongoing or imminent harm matches the forward-facing nature of injunctions. See 11A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2942, at 47 (3d ed. 2013) ("[I]njunctive relief looks to the future and is designed to deter ..."). Conversely, restitution is a remedy for past actions. See 1 DAN. B. DOBBS, LAW OF REMEDIES § 4.1(1), at 551 (2d ed. 1993) ("Restitution is a return or restoration of what the defendant has gained in a transaction."). Beyond the conceptual tension, this requirement raises an illogical implication: It would condition the Commission's ability to secure restitution for past conduct on *773 the existence of ongoing or imminent unlawful conduct.

Section 13(b)'s second requirement—that the Commission must reasonably believe that enjoining an ongoing or imminent violation would be in the public interest—raises a similar problem. The public interest in stopping or preventing a violation is distinct from the public interest in remedying a past harm. And yet the Commission's reading ties restitution to this inapposite inquiry.

The rest of section 13(b) is likewise keyed to injunctions, not other forms of equitable relief. For example, the statute conditions the district court's authority to issue a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction on injunction-specific requirements—such as "weighing the equities and considering the Commission's likelihood of ultimate success"—and dissolves the order or injunction within 20 days if the Commission doesn't issue an administrative complaint. § 53(b). These demands don't apply to equitable restitution, which has its own preconditions. See Great-West Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Knudson, 534 U.S. 204, 212–15, 122 S.Ct. 708, 151 L.Ed.2d 635 (2002).

True, this appeal concerns section 13(b)'s permanent-injunction provision, not the provision governing temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions, which is tied to the subsequent initiation of an administrative proceeding. And we have held that at least some of section 13(b)'s requirements don't apply to permanent injunctions. See United States v. JS & A Grp., 716 F.2d 451, 456–57 (7th Cir. 1983) (holding that the Commission can seek a permanent injunction without initiating an internal adjudication). But see FTC v. Shire ViroPharma, Inc., 917 F.3d 147, 156 (3d Cir. 2019) (requiring the Commission to allege an ongoing or imminent violation to receive a permanent injunction). But that's beside the point. Even if some of section 13(b)'s requirements do not apply to permanent injunctions, they inform the meaning of "injunction." We see no contextual support for giving vastly different meanings to section 13(b)'s two uses of the word "injunction." See Hall v. United States, 566 U.S. 506, 519, 132 S.Ct. 1882, 182 L.Ed.2d 840 (2012) ("At bottom, identical words and phrases within the same statute should normally be given the same meaning.") (quotation marks omitted). And in any event, we haven't drawn an interpretive distinction in the past. See FTC v. Elders Grain, Inc., 868 F.2d 901, 907 (7th Cir. 1989) (holding that section 13(b)'s preliminary-injunction provision also authorizes implied equitable relief).

The FTCA's two other enforcement provisions amplify the poor fit between section 13(b) and restitution. Both use more than the word "injunction" to authorize other forms of equitable relief. As discussed, when a person violates a final cease-and-desist order, the district courts are empowered to "grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate." § 45(l) (emphasis added). And when someone engages in conduct prohibited by a rule, the FTCA authorizes "such relief as the court finds necessary ..., [including] the refund of money or return of property." § 57b(b) (emphasis added).

[11] The absence of similar language in section 13(b) is conspicuous. "[W]here Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." Nken, 556 U.S. at 430, 129 S.Ct. 1749 (quotation marks omitted). This instruction applies with particular force here, where Congress simultaneously expanded § 45(l) to allow for "other and *774 further equitable relief" and enacted section 13(b) without this language. See Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, Pub. L. No. 93-153, § 408, 87 Stat. 576, 591 (1973). Moreover, Congress expressly approved restitution as a remedy under § 57b(b) two years after enacting section 13(b). See Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act, Pub. L. No. 93-637, § 206, 88 Stat. 2183, 2202 (1975). If section 13(b) permitted restitution as a general matter,

Congress would have had no reason to enact § 57b, which authorizes restitution under narrower circumstances.

Remedial scope isn't the only difference between section 13(b) and the FTCA's other enforcement mechanisms. The latter procedures also impose a detailed framework that the Commission must follow before obtaining a restitution order. This framework counterbalances the FTCA's amorphous "unfair or deceptive practices" standard by requiring the Commission to give defendants fair notice, either through cease-and-desist orders or rules that "define with specificity" prohibited acts. §§ 45(b); 57a(a)(1). The Commission can bypass these notice requirements only if it obtains a cease-and-desist order against a violator, brings a suit in court, and then establishes that the prohibited practice "is one which a reasonable man would have known under the circumstances was dishonest or fraudulent." § 57b(a)(2). Finally, the FTCA imposes a three-year statute of limitations on bringing actions against most violators. § 57b(d).

Section 13(b) doesn't offer any of these protections. And yet the Commission contends that it provides an unqualified right to the very remedies that the FTCA's other enforcement provisions give with heavy qualification. Reading an implied restitution remedy into section 13(b) makes these other provisions largely pointless. Without a clear textual signal, we cannot presume that Congress implicitly made such a consequential shift in policy. See Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass'ns, Inc., 531 U.S. 457, 468, 121 S.Ct. 903, 149 L.Ed.2d 1 (2001) ("Congress ... does not alter the fundamental details of a regulatory scheme in vague terms or ancillary provisions ....").

The tensions we've just discussed dissipate if we read section 13(b) to mean what it says: The remedy is limited to injunctive relief. In fact, giving section 13(b) its plain meaning harmonizes the three enforcement mechanisms. The FTCA gives the Commission a pair of backward-facing methods to obtain monetary relief for past injury. Its cease-and-desist power targets individual violations. See § 45(b). And its rule-enforcement authority under § 57b(a)(1) allows it to more efficiently address widespread unfair or deceptive practices. See Parrillo, supra, at 225–26.

Section 13(b) serves a different, forward-facing role: enjoining ongoing and imminent future violations. This authority aligns with the predicate requirements it imposes—notably, a reasonable belief that a violation is ongoing or imminent and that stopping the violation is in the public interest. § 53(b). It also explains the lack of procedural protections. As Congress reported when enacting section 13(b), the Commission's existing enforcement processes couldn't quickly address ongoing or imminent violations. See § 408(a)(1), 87 Stat. 576, 591 (finding that the Commission had "been restricted and hampered because of inadequate legal authority ... to seek preliminary injunctive relief to avoid unfair competitive practices") (emphasis added). Section 13(b) corrected this problem, providing an expedited pathway to injunctive relief. See id. § 408(b) (noting that the "purpose of [the] act" was to give the Commission "the requisite authority to insure prompt enforcement of the laws [it] *775 administers by granting statutory authority ... to seek preliminary injunctive relief") (emphasis added).

The Commission's argument to the contrary rests almost entirely on the saving clause in § 57b(e): "Remedies provided in this section are in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other remedy or right of action provided by State or Federal law. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any authority of the Commission under any other provision of law." According to the Commission, § 57b(e) explains away the tensions that its reading of section 13(b) otherwise creates.

[12] We disagree for two reasons. To start, the Commission's understanding of the saving clause runs against more than a century of interpretive practice. The Supreme Court has long instructed that acts "cannot be held to destroy [themselves]" through saving clauses. Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U.S. 426, 446, 27 S.Ct. 350, 51 L.Ed. 553 (1907); accord Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U.S. 491, 507, 33 S.Ct. 148, 57 L.Ed. 314 (1913); Nader v. Allegheny Airlines, Inc., 426 U.S. 290, 299, 96 S.Ct. 1978, 48 L.Ed.2d 643 (1976); Am. Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Cent. Office Tel., Inc., 524 U.S. 214, 228, 118 S.Ct. 1956, 141 L.Ed.2d 222 (1998). Put differently, we cannot read a saving clause to "allow specific provisions of the statute that contains it to be nullified." PMC, Inc. v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 151 F.3d 610, 618 (7th Cir. 1998). This principle extends to claims that a particular statutory provision implicitly authorizes new remedies. See Middlesex Cty. Sewerage Auth. v. Nat'l Sea Clammers Ass'n, 453 U.S. 1, 15–16, 101 S.Ct. 2615, 69 L.Ed.2d 435 (1981) ("It is doubtful that the phrase 'any statute' [in a saving clause] includes the very statute in which this statement was contained."). As we've explained, the Commission's reading of section 13(b) effectively nullifies § 57b. We cannot read § 57b(e) to authorize that self-defeating effect.

And even if the Commission's reading of the saving clause were correct, we couldn't infer a right to restitution in section 13(b). The saving clause preserves only those remedies that exist. It does not inform the question whether section 13(b) contains an implied power to award restitution.

The Commission also suggests that Congress "ratified" an implied section 13(b) restitution remedy in its 1993 and 2006 amendments to the FTCA. We disagree. The 1993 amendment reworked section 13(b)'s venue and service-of-process provisions but didn't alter its remedial scope. The 2006 amendment fares no better as a prop for the Commission's argument. It simply empowered the Commission to use "[a]ll remedies available to [it] with respect to unfair and deceptive acts or practices ..., including restitution," when prosecuting certain violations in foreign commerce. § 45(a)(4)(B). The Commission contends that the use of "restitution" in this provision refers to an implied restitution remedy in section 13(b). But the FTCA expressly authorizes restitution through § 45(l) and § 57b(b). So the 2006 amendment says nothing about the Commission's authority to seek that remedy under section 13(b).

In short, nothing in the text or structure of the FTCA supports an implied right to restitution in section 13(b), which by its terms authorizes only injunctions. Unsurprisingly, the Commission wagers nearly all of its case on stare decisis rather than the plain meaning of section 13(b). So we turn to that question.

2. The Road to Amy Travel

[13] [14] The Commission correctly observes that we addressed a materially identical challenge to the scope of section 13(b) in Amy Travel, 875 F.2d 564. Brown *776 in turn invites us to revisit that decision in light of intervening Supreme Court decisions. We of course can do so. "Although we must give considerable weight to our prior decisions, we are not bound by them absolutely and may overturn circuit precedent for compelling reasons." Russ v. Watts, 414 F.3d 783, 788 (7th Cir. 2005). An intervening Supreme Court decision that displaces the rationale of our precedent is one such reason. See Glaser v. Wound Care Consultants, Inc., 570 F.3d 907, 915 (7th Cir. 2009).

Brown's invitation implicates a line of Supreme Court precedents long predating Amy Travel. The prevailing interpretation of section 13(b) developed in the shadow of two decisions that took a capacious view of implied remedies: Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 66 S.Ct. 1086, 90

L.Ed. 1332 (1946), and Mitchell v. Robert DeMario Jewelry, Inc., 361 U.S. 288, 80 S.Ct. 332, 4 L.Ed.2d 323 (1960). To understand Amy Travel, we must begin with them.

Porter considered section 205(a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, which limited the rent that certain landlords could collect from their tenants. The act empowered district courts to issue a "permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order" against persons who collect rents above its limits. Porter, 328 U.S. at 397, 66 S.Ct. 1086. The Court held that section 205(a) authorizes restitution, offering this reasoning:

Unless otherwise provided by statute, all the inherent equitable powers of the District Court are available for the proper and complete exercise of [its equitable] jurisdiction. ... Unless a statute in so many words, or by a necessary and inescapable inference, restricts the court's jurisdiction in equity, the full scope of that jurisdiction is to be recognized and applied. The great principles of equity, securing complete justice, should not be yielded to light inferences, or doubtful construction.

Id. at 398, 66 S.Ct. 1086 (citations and quotation marks omitted).

Porter later clarified that implied remedies must be "consistent with the statutory language and policy, the legislative background and the public interest." Id. at 403, 66 S.Ct. 1086; see also id. at 400, 66 S.Ct. 1086 ("In framing such remedies under § 205(a), courts must act primarily to effectuate the policy of the Emergency Price Control Act and to protect the public interest while giving necessary respect to the private interests involved."). In short, Porter adopted a presumption in favor of implying equitable remedies that accord with statutory purpose. But it also recognized that an express statement or a "necessary and inescapable inference" to the contrary could rebut this presumption. Id. at 398, 66 S.Ct. 1086.

Returning to the Price Control Act, the Court held that restitution was a proper "other order" under section 205(a).

Id. at 399, 66 S.Ct. 1086. It offered two justifications. First, restitution could be an “equitable adjunct to an injunction.” Id. Second, restitution advanced the purpose of the statute. See id. at 400, 66 S.Ct. 1086 (“[T]he statutory policy of preventing inflation is plainly advanced if prices or rents which have been collected in the past are reduced to their legal maximums.”). Still, the Court found that an “inescapable inference” foreclosed one particular remedy. The statute’s separate right of action for damages “provide[d] an exclusive remedy relative to damages.” Id. at 401, 66 S.Ct. 1086. But “save [this] one aspect,” the statute invoked “the broad equitable jurisdiction that inheres in courts.” Id. at 403, 66 S.Ct. 1086.

In Mitchell the Court applied Porter to section 17 of the Fair Labor Standards Act *777 (“FLSA”), which gave district courts the jurisdiction to “restrain violations” of the statutory prohibition on firing employees for reporting workplace violations. 361 U.S. at 289, 80 S.Ct. 332. After quoting Porter’s broad language about equitable remedies, Mitchell reiterated that implied remedies must fit with the statutory purpose: “When Congress entrusts to an equity court the enforcement of prohibitions contained in a regulatory enactment, it must be taken to have acted cognizant of the historic power of equity to provide complete relief in light of the statutory purposes.” Id. at 291–92, 80 S.Ct. 332.

Applying Porter’s presumption, the Court drew on its understanding of the FLSA’s purpose, which was to achieve “minimum labor standards” by using worker complaints as a private enforcement mechanism. Id. at 292, 80 S.Ct. 332. The Court reasoned that restitution furthered that purpose. Without it, the “fear of economic retaliation” would stifle worker complaints. Id.

Mitchell then assessed whether anything in the FLSA precluded restitution as an implied remedy. The defendants pointed to the statute’s ban on awarding unpaid minimum wages and overtime compensation as one such provision, but the Court disagreed. It found “no indication in the language of the [ban], or in the legislative history, that Congress intended [it] to have a wider effect.” Id. at 294, 80 S.Ct. 332.

Porter and Mitchell were typical of their era: The Court would resolve ambiguities by identifying a statute’s purpose and “deducing the result most consonant with that purpose.” William N. Eskridge Jr., Politics Without Romance: Implications of Public Choice Theory for Statutory Interpretation, 74 VA. L. REV. 275, 282 (1988); see also

John F. Manning, Foreword: The Means of Constitutional Power, 128 HARV. L. REV. 1, 16–17 (2014) (“However clearly Congress framed its statutes, the Court could rework them to fit with the background policies that inspired them.”). Using this interpretive approach, the Court assumed that the judiciary could freely craft remedies to fully enforce whatever rights Congress had recognized. See Frank H. Easterbrook, Foreword: The Court and the Economic System, 98 HARV. L. REV. 4, 45–51 (1983). As the Court would proclaim four years after Mitchell, “it is the duty of the courts to be alert to provide such remedies as are necessary to make effective the congressional purpose.” J. I. Case Co. v. Borak, 377 U.S. 426, 433, 84 S.Ct. 1555, 12 L.Ed.2d 423 (1964).

* * *

Lower-court interpretations of section 13(b) built on Porter and Mitchell. The trail starts with FTC v. H. N. Singer, Inc., 668 F.2d 1107 (9th Cir. 1982). There the Ninth Circuit held that section 13(b)’s permanent-injunction provision implicitly authorizes preliminary injunctions and asset freezes.<sup>2</sup> Id. at 1113. While its analysis was cursory, Singer channeled Porter and Mitchell. The court held that preliminary injunctions and asset freezes advanced section 13(b)’s purpose by ensuring that assets were available at the end of the enforcement process. Singer also rejected *778 the defendant’s claim that the express equitable remedies in § 57b foreclosed implied remedies in section 13(b), pointing to the saving clause in § 57b(e).

Singer sparked a line of appellate cases holding that section 13(b) is a broad grant of equitable authority. The Eleventh Circuit followed Singer’s lead two years later. After quoting Porter’s language on implied remedies, the court concluded that it “agree[d] with Singer’s interpretation of [section] 13(b)” and without further discussion held that section 13(b) authorizes asset freezes. FTC v. U.S. Oil & Gas Corp., 748 F.2d 1431, 1434 (11th Cir. 1984) (per curiam).

Our decision in FTC v. World Travel Vacation Brokers, Inc., 861 F.2d 1020 (7th Cir. 1988), was next. There, the defendant passingly suggested that section 13(b)’s permanent-injunction provision does not implicitly authorize preliminary injunctions. (Recall that the statute’s express authorization for temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions is tied to the eventual initiation of an administrative proceeding.) We held that the defendant waived the argument, but we discussed the issue anyway “in order to satisfactorily explain our disposition of ... other issues.” Id. at 1026.

Because it was dicta, our reasoning was understandably brief. We simply quoted language from Singer and noted that we had “no reason to disagree with the conclusion of our colleagues of the Ninth and Eleventh Circuits that the authority to grant permanent injunctive relief also includes the authority to grant interlocutory relief.” Id. Other than distinguishing a prior decision, we did not discuss the matter further.

Two months after World Travel, we concluded in Elders Grain that section 13(b)'s preliminary-injunction provision implicitly authorizes rescission. 868 F.2d at 907. Perhaps because the parties didn't dispute the issue, our analysis was again cursory. But it was highly consequential. We articulated a new standard for inferring equitable remedies: “[T]he statutory grant of the power to issue a preliminary injunction carries with it the power to issue whatever ancillary equitable relief is necessary to the effective exercise of the granted power.” Id. Notably absent was any inquiry into whether an implied remedy was compatible with the statutory text and structure or whether Congress precluded the implied remedy. We instead would permit whatever implied remedies furthered the exercise of the express remedy.

The effect of this reasoning was evident in our justification for inferring the power to order rescission. We simply restated the facts of the case, which involved a transaction timed to avoid the Commission's review, and observed that “[t]o reward these tactics by holding that a district court has no power under section 13(b) to rescind a consummated transaction would go far toward rendering the statute a dead letter.” Id.

We extended Elders Grain to the permanent-injunction provision three months later in Amy Travel. The district court had ordered the defendants to pay more than $6 million in restitution to the Commission. Amy Travel, 875 F.2d at 570. The defendants argued on appeal that nothing in section 13(b) authorized monetary relief. We disagreed, explaining that our then-recent decisions in World Travel and Elders Grain “thwarted” the defendants' arguments. Id. at 571. In particular, we said that the reasoning in Elders Grain applied “with equal force” to the permanent-injunction provision. We adopted that expansive formulation, holding that section 13(b)'s “statutory grant of authority to the district court to issue permanent injunctions includes the power to order any ancillary equitable relief necessary to effectuate *779 the exercise of the granted powers.” Id. at 572. But unlike Elders Grain, we never addressed how an award of restitution was “necessary to effectuate the exercise” of the power to issue an injunction. We simply noted that restitution was a “proper form[ ] of ancillary relief.” Id. at 571.

Our approach in Amy Travel became the standard. Some circuits held, on a similarly brief analysis, that section 13(b) categorically authorizes the court's “full equitable powers,” including restitution. See FTC v. Gem Merch. Corp., 87 F.3d 466, 470 (11th Cir. 1996) (emphasis added); FTC v. Sec. Rare Coin & Bullion Corp., 931 F.2d 1312, 1314–15 (8th Cir. 1991). Others simply cited Amy Travel or other decisions to reach the same conclusion. See FTC v. Bronson Partners, LLC, 654 F.3d 359, 365 (2d Cir. 2011); FTC v. Freecom Commc'ns, Inc., 401 F.3d 1192, 1203 (10th Cir. 2005); FTC v. Pantron I. Corp., 33 F.3d 1088, 1102 (9th Cir. 1994); see also FTC v. Ross, 743 F.3d 886, 891 (4th Cir. 2014) (conceding that “arguments about how the structure, history, and purpose of the [FTCA] weigh against the conclusion that district courts have the authority to award consumer redress ... are not entirely unpersuasive” but allowing restitution because of Porter, Mitchell, and uniform circuit practice).

To be sure, these decisions have attracted some judicial skepticism. See Shire ViroPharma, 917 F.3d at 156, 161 n.19 (declining to decide whether section 13(b) authorizes monetary relief but concluding that it wasn't “meant to duplicate [§ 45(b)], which already prohibits past conduct”); FTC v. AMG Capital Mgmt., LLC, 910 F.3d 417, 429 (9th Cir. 2018) (O'Scannlain, J., concurring) (disagreeing with the prevailing interpretation). But the view that section 13(b) implicitly authorizes restitution has largely escaped critical examination.<sup>3</sup>

We have affirmed restitution awards under section 13(b) three times since Amy Travel. See United States v. Tankersley, 96 F. App'x 419, 422 (7th Cir. 2004); FTC v. Think Achievement Corp., 312 F.3d 259, 262 (7th Cir. 2002); FTC v. Febre, 128 F.3d 530, 534 (7th Cir. 1997). But Brown is the first litigant to question our precedent.

3. Modern Implied-Remedies Jurisprudence

The Supreme Court's understanding of implied remedies evolved after Porter and Mitchell. Though the Court continued to presume that courts could “use any available remedy to afford full relief” when a party had a general statutory cause of action, over time it began to emphasize that this presumption “yields where necessary to carry out the intent of Congress or to avoid frustrating the purposes of the statute involved.” Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch.

Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 284, 118 S.Ct. 1989, 141 L.Ed.2d 277 (1998) (quoting Guardians Ass'n v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 463 U.S. 582, 595, 103 S.Ct. 3221, 77 L.Ed.2d 866 (1983) (White, J., op.)); see also *780 California v. Sierra Club, 451 U.S. 287, 297, 101 S.Ct. 1775, 68 L.Ed.2d 101 (1981) (“The federal judiciary will not engraft a remedy on a statute, no matter how salutary, that Congress did not intend to provide.”). In particular, the Court now recognizes the importance of Congress’s choice to specify forms of relief. See, e.g., Franklin v. Gwinnett Cty. Pub. Sch., 503 U.S. 60, 69 n.6, 112 S.Ct. 1028, 117 L.Ed.2d 208 (1992) (noting that the presumption in favor of relief doesn’t apply “under a statute that expressly enumerated the remedies available to plaintiffs”); see also Karahalios v. Nat’l Fed’n of Fed. Emps., 489 U.S. 527, 533, 109 S.Ct. 1282, 103 L.Ed.2d 539 (1989) (“It is ... an elemental canon of statutory construction that where a statute expressly provides a remedy, courts must be especially reluctant to provide additional remedies.”) (quotation marks omitted).

A prominent example is ERISA. Because Congress has established a comprehensive remedial scheme for plaintiffs to enforce their rights under an employee-benefits plan, the Court has refused to infer additional extracontractual damages remedies. See Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Russell, 473 U.S. 134, 146, 105 S.Ct. 3085, 87 L.Ed.2d 96 (1985) (“The presumption that a remedy was deliberately omitted from a statute is strongest when Congress has enacted a comprehensive legislative scheme including an integrated system of procedures for enforcement.”) (quotation marks omitted). And where two environmental-protection statutes provide private rights of action for injunctive relief but require plaintiffs to notify defendants 60 days before suing, the Court has refused to infer a damages remedy or allow plaintiffs to obtain an injunction without the requisite notice. See Nat’l Sea Clammers Ass’n, 453 U.S. at 15, 101 S.Ct. 2615 (“In the absence of strong indicia of a contrary congressional intent, we are compelled to conclude that Congress provided precisely the remedies it considered appropriate.”).

These decisions collided with Porter and Mitchell in Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc., 516 U.S. 479, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 134 L.Ed.2d 121 (1996). Because Brown’s challenge centers on Meghrig, it warrants close review. There the Court addressed the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (“RCRA”), which permits private parties to sue handlers of “solid or hazardous waste which may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment.” 42 U.S.C. § 6972(a)(1)(B). The statute authorizes district courts “to restrain” any person who contributes to handling the waste, “to order such person to take such other action as may be necessary, or both.” § 6972(a). The question in Meghrig was whether § 6972(a) also allowed plaintiffs to recover waste-cleanup costs as restitution.

The Supreme Court refused to find an implied restitutionary remedy. “Under a plain reading of this remedial scheme,” the Court explained, plaintiffs could receive “a mandatory injunction, i.e., one that orders a responsible party to ‘take action’ by attending to the cleanup and proper disposal of toxic waste, or a prohibitory injunction, i.e., one that ‘restrains’ a responsible party from further violating [the] RCRA.” Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 484, 116 S.Ct. 1251. But neither of these forward-facing remedies “contemplates the award of past cleanup costs, whether these are denominated ‘damages’ or ‘equitable restitution.’” Id.

The Court reinforced its holding by comparing the RCRA to the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (“CERCLA”), 42 U.S.C. §§ 9601 et seq., which addresses similar toxic-waste issues. Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251. Unlike the RCRA, CERCLA expressly authorizes monetary relief. 42 U.S.C. § 9607(a)(4). “Congress thus demonstrated in CERCLA that it knew how to provide for the recovery *781 of cleanup costs [ ] and that the language used to define the remedies under [the] RCRA does not provide that remedy.” Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

The Court also pointed to the statute’s threshold requirement that a party can sue only when the waste “may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment.” § 6972(a)(1)(B). “The meaning of this timing restriction [was] plain” to the Court: “[S]ection 6972(a) was designed to provide a remedy that ameliorates present or obviates the risk of future ‘imminent’ harms, not a remedy that compensates for past cleanup efforts.” Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 485–86, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

Finally, the Court looked to “[o]ther aspects of [the] RCRA’s enforcement scheme.” Id. at 486, 116 S.Ct. 1251. Unlike CERCLA, the RCRA’s citizen-suit provision lacks a statute of limitations or a requirement that any recovered costs must be reasonable. The Court reasoned that “[i]f Congress had intended § 6972(a) to function as a cost-recovery mechanism, the absence of these provisions would be striking.” Id. The RCRA also halts citizen suits when the EPA or a state pursues an enforcement action, and it requires plaintiffs to give 90-days' notice to potential defendants before suing. See id. These two requirements made § 6972(a) a “wholly irrational mechanism” for remedying past harms. Id.

The Court then acknowledged the “line of cases holding that district courts retain inherent authority to award any equitable remedy that is not expressly taken away from them by Congress.” Id. at 487, 116 S.Ct. 1251 (citing Porter, 328 U.S. 395, 66 S.Ct. 1086, 90 L.Ed. 1332). But these cases couldn't support an implied restitution remedy. As the Court put it:

[T]he limited remedies described in § 6972(a), along with the stark differences between the language of that section and the cost-recovery provisions of CERCLA, amply demonstrate that Congress did not intend for a private citizen to be able to undertake a cleanup and then proceed to recover its costs under [the] RCRA. ... [W]here Congress has provided elaborate enforcement provisions for remedying the violation of a federal statute, as Congress has done with [the] RCRA and CERCLA, it cannot be assumed that Congress intended to authorize by implication additional judicial remedies for private citizens suing under the statute. It is an elemental canon of statutory construction that where a statute expressly provides a particular remedy or remedies, a court must be chary of reading others into it.

Id. at 487–88 (quotation marks omitted). Notwithstanding Porter, the Court held that § 6972(a) does not “contemplate the award of past cleanup costs.” Id. at 488, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

Since Meghrig, the Court has adhered to this more limited understanding of judicially implied remedies. See, e.g., Great-West, 534 U.S. at 209, 122 S.Ct. 708 (“We have therefore been especially reluctant to tamper with the enforcement scheme embodied in [ERISA] by extending remedies not specifically authorized by its text.”) (quotation marks and alteration omitted); Miller v. French, 530 U.S. 327, 340, 120

S.Ct. 2246, 147 L.Ed.2d 326 (2000) (concluding that the plain meaning of a provision expressed the congressional intent to displace equitable authority); see also Armstrong v. Exceptional Child Ctr., Inc., — U.S. —, 135 S. Ct. 1378, 1385, 191 L.Ed.2d 471 (2015) (holding that the Medicaid Act's provision of a specific remedy and the judicially unadministrable nature of the relevant statutory provision “preclude[d] the availability of equitable relief” *782 in section 30(A) of the statute); Gebser, 524 U.S. at 284, 118 S.Ct. 1989 (holding that courts cannot enlarge the “scope of available remedies” under an implied right of action “in a manner at odds with the statutory structure and purpose”). Rather than presuming that Congress authorizes the judiciary to supplement express statutory remedies, the Court now recognizes that “the express provision of one method of enforcing a substantive rule suggests that Congress intended to preclude others.” Armstrong, 135 S. Ct. at 1385.

4. Revisiting Amy Travel

[15] As this perhaps drawn-out discussion shows, an exploration of statutory purpose is no longer the Supreme Court's polestar in cases raising interpretive questions about the scope of statutory remedies, and that shift has unsettled Porter's and Mitchell's instruction to “provide complete relief in light of the statutory purposes.” Mitchell, 361 U.S. at 292, 80 S.Ct. 332; see also Singer, 668 F.2d at 1113 (grounding its reading of section 13(b) on this premise). See generally Manning, supra, at 23 (“[W]here ‘the statutory language is clear,’ the Court has disclaimed the need even ‘to reach arguments based on statutory purpose[ ] [or] legislative history.’” (quoting Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 950, 129 S.Ct. 2237, 173 L.Ed.2d 1265 (2009))); WILLIAM N. ESKRIDGE JR., INTERPRETING LAW: A PRIMER ON HOW TO READ STATUTES AND THE CONSTITUTION 81 (2016) (“We are all textualists. That means that a judge must relate all sources of and arguments about statutory interpretation to a text the legislature has enacted.”). Indeed, the Court has “abandoned” its prior understanding that judges must “be alert to provide such remedies as are necessary to make effective the congressional purpose expressed by a statute.” Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 287, 121 S.Ct. 1511, 149 L.Ed.2d 517 (2001) (quotation marks omitted); accord Ziglar v. Abbasi, — U.S. —, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1855, 198 L.Ed.2d 290 (2017). It is now well settled that Congress, not the judiciary, controls the scope of remedial relief when a statute provides a cause of action. See Armstrong, 135 S. Ct. at 1385 (“Courts of equity can no more disregard statutory and constitutional requirements and provisions than can courts of law.”) (quotation marks omitted); Thomas W. Merrill, The

Disposing Power of the Legislature, 110 COLUM. L. REV. 452, 465–66 (2010).

Whatever strength Porter and Mitchell retain, Meghrig clarifies that they cannot be used as Amy Travel saw them—a license to categorically recognize all ancillary forms of equitable relief without a close analysis of statutory text and structure. To be sure, the Court still presumes that courts retain their “traditional equitable authority.” Miller, 530 U.S. at 340, 120 S.Ct. 2246. But even under Porter and Mitchell, this authority comes with an important qualifier: “unless otherwise provided by statute.” Porter, 328 U.S. at 398, 66 S.Ct. 1086; Mitchell, 361 U.S. at 291, 80 S.Ct. 332. Unsurprisingly, every appellate court to consider the relationship between Meghrig, Porter, and Mitchell recognizes that Meghrig reinforced and clarified this qualifier.

Some circuits have concluded that a statute displaces equitable authority when it specifies a particular remedy. See Owner-Operator Indep. Drivers Ass’n, Inc. v. Swift Transp. Co., 632 F.3d 1111, 1121 (9th Cir. 2011) (finding that a statutory provision allowing a person to seek “injunctive relief” acted “to the exclusion of other equitable remedies”); Landstar Sys., 622 F.3d at 1324 (noting that the statute at issue authorized only injunctions and concluding that if it “allowed for restitution or disgorgement, it would have so stated”). Others more narrowly construe Meghrig *783 as a command that “courts must consider a statute’s remedial scheme” when determining whether a statute displaces equitable authority. See United States v. Lane Labs-USA Inc., 427 F.3d 219, 235 (3d Cir. 2005); see also United States v. Rx Depot, Inc., 438 F.3d 1052, 1057 (10th Cir. 2006) (reading Meghrig as showing that “a statute’s particular characteristics” can displace equitable authority).

The D.C. Circuit thoroughly examined the effect of Meghrig in United States v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 396 F.3d 1190 (D.C. Cir. 2005). Harmonizing Meghrig and Porter, it held that a statute’s “comprehensive and reticulated scheme, along with the plain meaning of the words themselves, serves to raise a necessary and inescapable inference, sufficient under Porter, that Congress intended to limit relief.” Id. at 1200 (quotation marks and citation omitted).

We don’t need to plant ourselves firmly along this doctrinal spectrum to decide this case. It’s inescapable that Meghrig not only displaced Amy Travel’s categorical approach to judicially implied remedies but also its interpretation of section 13(b). Every one of Meghrig’s reasons for refusing to find restitutionary authority in the RCRA applies with equal force to section 13(b).

Like the RCRA, section 13(b)’s plain text doesn’t contemplate an award of restitution. See Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 484, 116 S.Ct. 1251. It authorizes only temporary restraining orders and injunctions. And like the relationship between the RCRA and CERCLA, the relationship between section 13(b), § 45(I), and § 57b(b) “is telling.” Id. at 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251. Both § 45(I) and § 57b(b) expressly authorize additional equitable remedies. § 45(I) (“mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as [courts] deem appropriate”); § 57b(b) (“such relief as the court finds necessary ..., [including] the refund of money or return of property”). Section 13(b) lacks comparable language.

Meghrig also instructs us to interpret remedial language with reference to “the harm at which it is directed.” 516 U.S. at 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251. While the FTCA’s express restitution provisions authorize the Commission to sue for past conduct, to proceed under section 13(b), the Commission must reasonably believe that a person “is violating” or “about to violate” the law. § 53(b)(1); cf. § 45(b) (empowering the Commission to bring a cease-and-desist action when it reasonably believes someone “has been or is” violating the act). As with the RCRA, “[t]he meaning of this timing restriction is plain.” Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251. Section 13(b) “was designed to provide a remedy that ameliorates present or obviates the risk of future ‘imminent’ harms, not a remedy that compensates” for past violations. Id. at 486, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

Further, as we’ve explained, section 13(b) is procedurally incompatible with restitution. For example, before invoking section 13(b), the Commission must reasonably believe that stopping an ongoing or imminent violation is in the public interest. § 53(b)(2). And the statute dissolves a preliminary injunction if the Commission doesn’t begin an administrative proceeding before a court-set deadline. § 53(b). But the Commission would have no need for an administrative proceeding if it can get complete restitutionary relief through section 13(b)’s permanent-injunction provision. In short, section 13(b)’s prerequisites, like those in the RCRA, make it a “wholly irrational mechanism” for remedying past harms. Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 486, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

Relatedly, unlike § 57b(b), section 13(b) has no statute of limitations. The absence *784 of a limitations period in the RCRA was “striking” to the Meghrig Court and provided strong evidence that the RCRA’s injunction provision did not implicitly authorize restitution. Id. The same is true here.

Section 13(b) also lacks a central feature of the FTCA provisions that expressly permit monetary relief: a notice requirement. When the Commission brings an administrative cease-and-desist action, it can secure restitution only by proving that the violation occurred after its order became final or that “a reasonable man” would have known that the conduct was fraudulent. § 45(J); 57b(a)(2). And notice is also baked into the Commission’s power to promulgate and enforce rules. The Commission must follow detailed procedures before promulgating a final rule. See id. § 57a(b)(1) (requiring publication of notice and an informal hearing for rulemaking). Moreover, final rules must “define with specificity” the prohibited acts. § 57a(a)(1)(B).

The Supreme Court has held that similar provisions are crucial to determining the remedial scope of implied rights of action, a closely related context: “It would be unsound ... for a statute’s express system of enforcement to require notice to the recipient and an opportunity to come into voluntary compliance while a judicially implied system of enforcement permits substantial liability without regard to the recipient’s knowledge or its corrective actions upon receiving notice.” Gebser, 524 U.S. at 289, 118 S.Ct. 1989. We face the same unsound result here: Reading an implied restitution remedy into section 13(b) allows the Commission to circumvent the FTCA’s detailed notice requirements.

[16] Finally, we note that the difference in plaintiffs—private citizens in Meghrig and a federal agency here—isn’t material. To be sure, when “the public interest is involved in a proceeding,” a court’s “equitable powers assume an even broader and more flexible character than when only a private controversy is at stake.” Porter, 328 U.S. at 398, 66 S.Ct. 1086; accord Kansas v. Nebraska, 574 U.S. 445, 135 S.Ct. 1042, 1053, 191 L.Ed.2d 1 (2015). But the public interest doesn’t turn on the identity of the parties involved.

Virginian Railway Co. v. System Federation No. 40, 300 U.S. 515, 552, 57 S.Ct. 592, 81 L.Ed. 789 (1937), the authority Porter cited to invoke the “public interest,” is instructive on this point. Even though the suit was between a railroad company and a union, the Court determined that “[m]ore [was] involved than the settlement of a private controversy.” Id. “The peaceable settlement of labor controversies ... is a matter of public concern.” Id.; see also id. (“The fact that Congress has indicated its purpose to make negotiation obligatory is in itself a declaration of public interest and policy ....”). Presaging Porter, the Court observed that “[c]ourts of equity may, and frequently do, go much farther both to give and withhold relief in furtherance of the public interest than they are accustomed to go when only private interests are involved.” Id.; cf. Gen. Tel. Co. of the Nw., Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 326 & n.8, 100 S.Ct. 1698, 64 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980) (“When the EEOC acts, albeit at the behest of and for the benefit of specific individuals, it acts also to vindicate the public interest in preventing employment discrimination.” (citing Porter, 328 U.S. at 397–98, 66 S.Ct. 1086)).

Under Virginian Railway Co., both Meghrig and this case implicate the public interest. Both involve enforcing federal statutory obligations, and both involve matters of “public concern”—environmental cleanup and consumer protection. Even so, Meghrig did not find an implied right *785 to restitution in the RCRA. So the fact that the government is the plaintiff here does not affect the analysis. Consider United States v. Apex Oil Co., in which we examined Meghrig’s impact on 42 U.S.C. § 6973(a), the RCRA’s government-suit provision. 579 F.3d 734 (7th Cir. 2009). We did not draw a distinction between the RCRA’s government and citizen-suit provisions. Observing that the provisions use “identical language,” we concluded that the RCRA “entitles the government only to require the defendant to clean up the contaminated site at the defendant’s expense.” Id. at 737. We then announced that our “[e]arlier cases, ... which allowed an award of clean-up costs on the basis of general equitable principles set forth in such cases as Mitchell v. Robert De Mario Jewelry, Inc., and Porter v. Warner Holding Co., are dead after Meghrig.” Id. (citations omitted).

[17] Although section 13(b) doesn’t use identical language as the RCRA’s citizen-suit provision, Meghrig remains materially indistinguishable. So we must pay close attention to its bottom line: “[W]here Congress has provided elaborate enforcement provisions for remedying the violation of a federal statute, ... it cannot be assumed that Congress intended to authorize by implication additional judicial remedies ....” Meghrig, 516 U.S. at 487–88, 116 S.Ct. 1251 (emphasis added) (quotation marks omitted); see also Gebser, 524 U.S. at 290, 118 S.Ct. 1989 (“Where a statute’s express enforcement scheme hinges its most severe sanction on notice and unsuccessful efforts to obtain compliance, we cannot attribute to Congress the intention to have implied an enforcement scheme that allows imposition of greater liability without comparable conditions.”) (emphasis added).

Our limited analysis in Amy Travel doesn't offer a way to distinguish Meghrig. It instead requires us to ignore section 13(b)'s text and disregard the FTCA's "elaborate enforcement provisions." In light of the Court's commands in Meghrig, our holding in Amy Travel is no longer viable. Conversely, reading section 13(b) as authorizing only injunctive relief—that is, reading it to mean what it plainly says—harmonizes Meghrig with Porter and Mitchell, which also called for a statute-specific and remedy-specific inquiry before authorizing an implied form of relief. See, e.g., Porter, 328 U.S. at 403, 66 S.Ct. 1086 (holding that a separate cause of action for damages was enough to preclude courts from inferring that remedy elsewhere).

We recognize that this conclusion departs from the consensus view of our sister circuits. But when deciding whether we should overturn precedent, "[w]e are not merely to count noses. The parties are entitled to our independent judgment." United States v. Hill, 48 F.3d 228, 232 (7th Cir. 1995). And we must break from our colleagues. As noted, most circuits adopted their position by uncritically accepting our holding in Amy Travel, which expanded on Elders Grain, which expanded on Singer, which expanded on Porter and Mitchell. No circuit has examined whether reading a restitution remedy into section 13(b) comports with the FTCA's text and structure. Nor has anyone determined whether § 45 forecloses this remedy. And although some have briefly discussed § 57b, they have done so only to find refuge in the saving clause in § 57b(e). Perhaps most importantly, no circuit has ever considered the effect of Meghrig in a section 13(b) case.

[18] We are well aware that we need a compelling reason to overturn circuit precedent. "However, important as stare decisis is, it is equally important for us to respect the statutes that Congress has passed and to correct any problems we see in our prior interpretations of those statutes." *786 Ahng v. All-steel, 96 F.3d 1033, 1037 (7th Cir. 1996); see also S. Ill. Power Coop. v. EPA, 863 F.3d 666, 673 (7th Cir. 2017) (noting that statutory stare decisis "is not without limits"). Even in the realm of statutory interpretation, a Supreme Court decision "on an analogous issue that compels us to reconsider our position" counts as a compelling reason to overturn precedent. Glaser, 570 F.3d at 915. We cannot favor our own decisions over those of the Supreme Court.

Stare decisis alone cannot overcome Amy Travel's clear incompatibilities with the FTCA's text and structure, Meghrig, and the Supreme Court's broader refinement of its implied remedies jurisprudence. We therefore hold that section 13(b)'s permanent-injunction provision does not authorize monetary relief.<sup>4</sup>

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, we VACATE the restitution award. In all other respects, we AFFIRM the judgment.

Wood, Chief Judge, with whom Rovner and Hamilton, Circuit Judges, join, dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc.

For decades, this court has successfully used a local rule, Circuit Rule 40(e), for two important purposes: to highlight a decision to create a conflict in the circuits, and to clean up earlier decisions whose soundness has been undermined by later legislation, Supreme Court activity, or a consensus among our sister circuits. Yet we have taken care not to use Rule 40(e) in a way that defeats our profound commitment to oral argument—a commitment that sets us apart from most of the other circuits, and one that consistently improves the quality of our decisionmaking. The opportunity to ask questions of counsel, to hear the questions of fellow judges, and to have a full debate after argument regularly reveals aspects of a case that even the most thorough reading of the briefs on one judge's part cannot provide.

The majority, however, has chosen to use Rule 40(e) in the case now before us. It is a singularly inappropriate case for that treatment: it overrules not only a long-standing decision from this court, FTC v. Amy Travel Serv., Inc., 875 F.2d 564 (7th Cir. 1989), but it also pays no heed to the fact that eight other circuits agree with the Amy Travel approach. See Brief of the Federal Trade Commission at 28 n. 12. Perhaps if a recent Supreme Court decision demanded that sea change, the majority's opinion would be defensible. But there is no such decision. Instead, the majority extrapolates from the line of cases addressing whether a private party has an implied right of action to the issue presented here: whether a government agency, the Federal Trade Commission, which enjoys an express right of action under a statute for injunctive relief, is entitled to a restitutionary remedy that is ancillary to, or part of, the injunction.

To my knowledge, no court has ever tied the hands of a government agency in the way that the majority has done here, and the majority cites none. It has taken this step without the careful consideration that plenary en banc review would have provided. I am reminded of the words spoken by *787 Gaius Julius Caesar in 49 B.C.E., as he approached the Rubicon river at the head of his army. He knew that the Roman Senate forbade any armed force to enter Rome. But he decided to flout that command, and as he marched with his troops across the river, he is said to have proclaimed “alea iacta est” – the die is cast. And indeed it was. Caesar’s act led to civil war and eventually the end of the Roman Republic; he became dictator for life and inaugurated the Roman Empire. See, e.g., Meaning Behind the Phrase to Cross the Rubicon, <https://www.thoughtco.com/meaning-cross-the-rubicon117548>. I devoutly hope that the majority here has not cast the die in a way that will transform Rule 40(e) from an efficiency-promoting rule for relatively routine updates to our circuit law into something that erodes our commitment to plenary consideration, along with oral argument, of every fully counseled case. Time will tell. But the Rule is surely being misused in this case. Perhaps that would not matter if no reasonable person could question the correctness of the majority’s reasoning. Regrettably, that is not the case. From the materials now before us, I believe that the court is making a mistake, and it is doing so in a procedurally inappropriate way.

The central issue in the case relates to the proper interpretation of section 13(b) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 53(b), which authorizes the Commission to sue for injunctive relief. Injunctions come in all shapes and sizes: some are prohibitory, some are mandatory, some include submission to an equitable master, some include reporting requirements, and many include ancillary measures that are designed to ensure that the injunction is effective. At least since our decision in Amy Travel, the Federal Trade Commission has understood that its authority to seek an injunction from the court includes the authority to seek a measure commanding the defendant to disgorge unlawfully acquired money or property. In other words, the injunction may include an order from the court for the disgorgement type of restitution.

Obviously the restitution itself is not an “injunction,” any more than the master is an “injunction,” or the reporting requirements are an “injunction.” The injunction is the order from the court either to do something or to refrain from doing something. Black’s Law Dictionary lists 25 different types of injunctions under that general heading. See entry for “injunction,” Black’s Law Dictionary at 904–05 (10th ed. 2014). The term “injunction” itself is defined simply as “A court order commanding or preventing an action.” Id. A “mandatory injunction” is one “that orders an affirmative act or mandates a specified course of conduct.” Id. Nothing whatever in section 13(b) deletes from the list of possible affirmative acts that an injunction may include an order requiring the enjoined party to return ill-gotten gains, or to pay money into a court escrow account, or otherwise to turn over property. That should be enough by itself to show the error in the path the majority has taken.

The majority rejects this straightforward reading of the statute and argues to the contrary that “the textual case in the FTCA against implying restitution in section 13(b) is overwhelming.” But more than rhetoric is needed to establish that point. From my standpoint, if the text is overwhelming at all, I find it overwhelmingly to support the power of the FTC to use any of the tools that Congress gave it, including the one it used here, which entitles it to seek injunctive relief from a court.

The Supreme Court supported the approach I would take in California v. American Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 110 S.Ct. 1853, 109 L.Ed.2d 240 (1990). There the *788 question was whether “divestiture is a form of injunctive relief within the meaning of” section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. 495 U.S. at 275, 110 S.Ct. 1853. After the FTC had decided not to challenge a merger of certain grocery stores in California, the merger was consummated. The next day, however, the State of California filed an action in federal court alleging that the merger violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and seeking “an injunction requiring American to divest itself of all of [the acquired firm’s] assets and businesses in the State of California.” 495 U.S. at 276, 110 S.Ct. 1853. The district court had granted a preliminary injunction along those lines, but the Ninth Circuit reversed on the ground that the injunctive relief authorized by the statute did not include divestiture. The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeals, finding that “the statutory language [of section 16] indicates Congress’ intention that traditional principles of equity govern the grant of injunctive relief.” Id. at 281, 110 S.Ct. 1853. An order of divestiture is almost identical to an order requiring equitable restitution: both require the wrongdoer to turn over property that was unlawfully obtained. Similarly, the language of section 16 of the Clayton Act is not materially different from the language of section 13(b) of the FTC Act. In my view, the majority’s approach conflicts with the most closely applicable Supreme Court decision.

This is especially troubling because the majority has not pointed to any case in which the Supreme Court has said that a federal agency must avoid one type of remedial authority it holds and instead use a different type. That, effectively, is what the majority has done here, in its discussion of the various tools the FTC Act provides for enforcement of the prohibition against unfair or deceptive trade practices. Ante at 770–71. The Commission may use its “cease and desist” power in an administrative proceeding, see FTC Act § 5(b), 15 U.S.C. § 45(b); it may, after providing notice to the Attorney General under section 16 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 56, sue someone who violates a cease-and-desist order, see FTC Act § 5(l)–(m), 15 U.S.C. § 45(l)–(m); it may promulgate rules that define unfair or deceptive practices, FTC Act § 18, 15 U.S.C. § 57a; or it may (as it did here) file a suit in federal court for an injunction, FTC Act § 13(b), 15 U.S.C. § 53(b).

The Supreme Court recognizes that agencies have broad discretion in their choice of which of several authorized procedural tools they wish to use as they carry out their mission. The best-known example of this practice comes from the field of labor law. The National Labor Relations Board has both rulemaking power, see 29 U.S.C. § 156, and adjudicatory powers, see 29 U.S.C. § 160. The Board does not, however, follow the practice of using its rulemaking powers when it announces new rules; it prefers to proceed on a case-by-case basis through the adjudicative process. See, e.g., Mark H. Grunewald, The NLRB’s First Rulemaking: An Exercise in Pragmatism, 41 DUKE L.J. 273 (1991). Over the years people have challenged this choice on the ground that the Board is evading the detailed protections for rulemaking that Congress has provided in the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 553, but the Supreme Court has always rejected those arguments. See, e.g., NLRB v. Bell Aerospace Co. Div. of Textron, Inc., 416 U.S. 267, 94 S.Ct. 1757, 40 L.Ed.2d 134 (1974), confirming the rule from NLRB v. Wyman-Gordon Co., 394 U.S. 759, 89 S.Ct. 1426, 22 L.Ed.2d 709 (1969), to this effect. As the Bell Aerospace opinion put it, “[t]he views expressed in Chenery II and Wyman-Gordon make plain that the Board is not precluded from *789 announcing new principles in an adjudicative proceeding and that the choice between rulemaking and adjudication lies in the first instance within the Board’s discretion. Although there may be situations where the Board’s reliance on adjudication would amount to an abuse of discretion or a violation of the Act, nothing in the present case would justify such a conclusion.” 416 U.S. at 294, 94 S.Ct. 1757.

I can think of no principled reason why the Labor Board should have that discretion, but the FTC should not. The majority argues to the contrary from a line of cases that is inapposite. It conflates decisions about which plaintiffs are authorized to bring a suit (the implied-right-of-action line) with the distinct question about what remedies are available to a party that is expressly authorized by statute to sue, as the FTC surely is here. The cases on which the panel relies all involve private enforcement, where the Court has warned us to ensure that we should not permit a facile work-around to a complex enforcement system. See, e.g., Middlesex Cnty. Sewerage Auth. v. Nat’l Sea Clammers Ass’n, 453 U.S. 1, 14, 101 S.Ct. 2615, 69 L.Ed.2d 435 (1981). A case involving public enforcement is quite different. If the agency believes that Path A has certain advantages and downsides, while Path B has different pluses and minuses, neither approach should be read out of the statute. Both are available to the agency, and each one will serve its intended functions, constrained by its safeguards.

The majority thinks that it would be “wholly irrational” for Congress to write a statute that provides for restitution as part of a 13(b) temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction, or permanent injunction, while also spelling out less-streamlined options for the Commission to pursue. But this ignores real differences among its options. Perhaps, because of the risk of dissipation of ill-gotten gains, the Commission might want restitution to begin right away while the case is pending, e.g., through payment into a court-operated escrow account; in order to do that, it can seek a preliminary injunction for the turn-over of funds. In another case, the Commission might prefer to use the cease-and-desist route and develop the factual record through its own administrative processes—ensuring judicial deference to its fact-finding down the road—rather than operate under the thumb of a court.

Branding such a scheme as “wholly irrational” is unwarranted without a more focused examination of why the Commission might choose one route or another—a choice, I reiterate, that we usually allow agencies to make. Cf. Bell Aerospace, 416 U.S. at 294–95, 94 S.Ct. 1757 (concluding that agency has power to choose adjudication or rulemaking as a means to announce new principles while examining agency’s legitimate reasons for pursuing one or the other method of proceeding). Such an inquiry requires a deferential look at why Congress gave the agency a menu of options. That is just what Congress did in the FTC Act. The statute gives the Commission the ability to move unilaterally when it uses its rulemaking or cease-and-desist powers, and to act as a party before the court if it wants a preliminary or permanent injunction. It is not up to us to take away that which Congress gave.

Another inapposite line of cases on which the majority relies addresses implied private rights of action—a problem we surely do not have here. See, e.g., Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275, 121 S.Ct. 1511, 149 L.Ed.2d 517 (2001). Rather than a private party, we have a government agency, and rather than an implied right of action, we have an express statutory provision authorizing the agency to seek injunctive relief. That makes a difference. *790 Indeed, in a number of areas—antitrust, securities regulation, RICO—the Supreme Court has begun drawing a distinction between the breadth of a private right of action and the greater breadth appropriate for public enforcement. Thus, in RJR Nabisco Inc. v. European Community, — U.S. —, 136 S. Ct. 2090, 195 L.Ed.2d 476 (2016), the Court found that private parties (including for this purpose the European Community, which had no special governmental status under the applicable law) cannot enforce RICO extraterritorially, but that the U.S. government stands in a different position. The Court made the same point in F. Hoffman-La Roche Ltd. v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 124 S.Ct. 2359, 159 L.Ed.2d 226 (2004):

In all three cases [on which the Empagran plaintiffs relied], however, the plaintiff was the Government of the United States. A Government plaintiff, unlike a private plaintiff, must seek to obtain the relief necessary to protect the public from further anticompetitive conduct and to redress anticompetitive harm. And a Government plaintiff has legal authority broad enough to allow it to carry out this mission. 15 U.S.C. § 25 ... . Private plaintiffs, by way of contrast, are far less likely to be able to secure broad relief. See California v. American Stores Co., 495 U.S. 271, 295 [110 S.Ct. 1853, 109 L.Ed.2d 240] (1990) (“Our conclusion that a district court has the power to order divestiture in appropriate cases brought [by private plaintiffs] does not, of course, mean that such power should be exercised in every situation in which the Government would be entitled to such relief...”); 2 P. Areeda, Hovenkamp & R. Blair, Antitrust Law ¶¶ 303d–303e, pp. 40–45 (2d ed. 2000) (distinguishing between private and government suits in terms of availability, public interest motives, and remedial scope) ... . This difference means that the Government’s ability, in these three cases, to obtain relief helpful to those injured abroad tells us little or nothing about whether this Court would have awarded similar relief at the request of private plaintiffs.

Id. at 170–71, 124 S.Ct. 2359.

The panel’s effort to explain why injunctive relief cannot include an order to disgorge money by reference to Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 131 S.Ct. 2541, 180 L.Ed.2d 374 (2011), is no more successful. Wal-Mart was a class action case, through and through. Most of it deals with the inappropriateness of a money-damages action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3) for the sprawling and unmanageable class that the plaintiffs had proposed. But the Court also addressed the plaintiffs’ back-up position, which was their effort to certify a class for backpay claims under Rule 23(b)(2). Subpart (b)(2) of the rule allows a class if “the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole.” Note the emphasis in this language on general grounds, and relief that works for the class as a whole. As the Court pointed out, that unity of interests is especially critical in a (b)(2) class, because the unnamed class members have no right to notice and the chance to opt out of such a class, yet they would be bound by the outcome of the lawsuit. Those concerns are miles away from what we have in this case.

What the Court said in Wal-Mart is that claims for monetary relief cannot be certified “at least where (as here) the monetary relief is not incidental to the injunctive or declaratory relief.” 564 U.S. at 360, 131 S.Ct. 2541. It went on to explain itself as follows:

*791 One possible reading of [Rule 23(b)(2)] is that it applies only to requests for such injunctive or declaratory relief and does not authorize the class certification of monetary claims at all. We need not reach that broader question in this case, because we think that, at a minimum, claims for individualized relief (like the backpay at issue here) do not satisfy the Rule. The key to the (b)(2) class is “the indivisible nature of the injunctive or declaratory remedy warranted—the notion that the conduct is such that it can be enjoined or declared unlawful only as to all of the class members or as to none of them.” Nagareda, 84 N.Y.U.L.Rev., at 132. In other words, Rule 23(b)(2) applies only when a single injunction or declaratory judgment would provide relief to each member of the class. It does not authorize class certification when each individual class member would be entitled to a different injunction or declaratory judgment against the defendant. Similarly, it does not authorize class certification when each class member would be entitled to an individualized award of monetary damages. ...

Given that structure, we think it clear that individualized monetary claims belong in Rule 23\(b\)\(3\). The procedural protections attending the (b)(3) class—predominance, superiority, mandatory notice, and the right to opt out—are missing from (b)(2) not because the Rule considers them unnecessary, but because it considers them unnecessary to a (b)(2) class. When a class seeks an indivisible injunction benefitting all its members at once, there is no reason to undertake a case-specific inquiry into whether class issues predominate or whether class action is a superior method of adjudicating the dispute. Predominance and superiority are self-evident. But with respect to each class member’s individualized claim for money, that is not so—which is precisely why (b)(3) requires the judge to make findings about predominance and superiority before allowing the class.”

Id. at 360–63, 131 S.Ct. 2541.

One cannot read this excerpt—lengthy in order to ensure that the full context comes through—without seeing that the Court was concerned solely about which type of class action should be used where money is concerned. No such problem is possible in the case before us. First, since there is only one plaintiff—the Commission—we have no unnamed class members to worry about. Second, the court in our case does not need to worry about individualized relief. The FTC is itself entitled to seek relief on behalf of those injured by Credit Bureau’s misdeeds. Cf. EEOC v. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Wis. Sys., 288 F.3d 296, 300 (7th Cir. 2002) (EEOC may pursue age-discrimination case against a state entity on behalf of individual employees, even though individual cases would be barred by the state’s sovereign immunity).

Credit Bureau must merely turn over to the FTC a single lump sum representing the total restitution due. This is the end of the court’s involvement with the equitable relief in this case. As the district court wrote, “[j]udgment in the amount of Five Million, Two Hundred Sixty Thousand, Six Hundred Seventy-One and Thirty-Six Cents (“$5,260,671.36”) is entered in favor of the Commission against Defendants, jointly and severally, as equitable monetary relief. Defendants are ordered to pay to the Commission [$5,260,671.36]. Such payment must be made within 7 days of entry of this Order ...” Final Judgment and Order for Permanent Injunction and Other Equitable Relief Against Defendants Credit Bureau Center, LLC and Michael Brown (Kennelly, J.) (June 26, 2018) (emphasis added). It then falls to the Commission *792 to craft a plan to return the ill-gotten gains to each person who was harmed, where possible, and then turn over the remaining money to the Treasury. See FTC Office of Claims and Refunds Annual Report 2017, <https://www.ftc.gov/system/files/documents/reports/bureau-consumer-protection-office-claims-refunds-annual-report-2017-consumer-refunds-effectedjuly/redressreportformattedforweb122117.pdf>. There is no risk that an unnamed class member’s claim would be lost through the operation of the law of preclusion. There is no risk, as in Wal-Mart, that the court would need to “reevaluate the roster of class members continually,” id. at 364, 131 S.Ct. 2541. Nor, in contrast to Wal-Mart, does this case present the problem of internal conflict within a class. Id. at 365, 131 S.Ct. 2541. Instead, the restitution issue can be resolved in “one stroke.” Id. at 350, 131 S.Ct. 2541. In sum, nothing in Wal-Mart says that an injunction to turn over wrongfully acquired property (here, in the form of money) to a government agency is in any way objectionable.

I next turn to the Supreme Court’s decision in Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc., 516 U.S. 479, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 134 L.Ed.2d 121 (1996), on which the majority relies so heavily. The issue in Meghrig was “whether § 7002 of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA), 42 U.S.C. § 6972, authorizes a private cause of action to recover the prior cost of cleaning up toxic waste that does not, at the time of suit, continue to pose an endangerment to health or the environment.” 516 U.S. at 481, 116 S.Ct. 1251. In order to answer that question, the Court had to construe the citizen-suit provision of RCRA, 42 U.S.C. § 6972(a). It held that two requirements of section 6972 defeated plaintiff KFC’s suit: first, the citizen-suit provision reaches only imminent and substantial harms, not past problems that have been addressed; and second, the remedial language focuses only on the restraint of ongoing clean-up and disposal problems, not on past clean-up costs (“whether [those] are denominated ‘damages’ or ‘equitable restitution’”). 516 U.S. at 484, 116 S.Ct. 1251.

This was a pure question of statutory interpretation. The relevant part of RCRA authorized a citizen suit “against any person ... who has contributed or who is contributing to the past or present handling, storage, treatment, transportation, or disposal of any solid or hazardous waste which may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment.” 42 U.S.C. § 6972(a)(1)(B) (emphasis added). The Court gave that provision its natural reading—that is, as something that did not include a remedy for past cleanup costs. Id. at 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251. It emphasized in that connection the importance of the imminence requirement, which entirely ruled out any form of relief, however labeled, for a fixed sum representing past expenditures. Only in that context did the Court reject the argument that a plaintiff “could seek equitable restitution of money previously spent on cleanup efforts.” Id. at 487, 116 S.Ct. 1251. General rules about equitable powers were of no importance for a statute that drew the temporal line at problems that are “imminent and substantial.” Id. Interestingly, the Court declined to rule on the question “whether a private party could seek to obtain an injunction requiring another party to pay cleanup costs which arise after a RCRA citizen suit has been properly commenced ... .” Id. at 488, 116 S.Ct. 1251. That reservation proves that the Court was not ruling out equitable turn-over of funds, period. It was simply saying that past expenditures were not covered by the statute in front of it.

So even Meghrig itself, a case involving private plaintiffs, did not purport categorically *793 to exclude from injunctive relief an order to make payments. It is thus all the more remarkable that the majority interprets Meghrig to impose such a limitation on the relief that a government plaintiff can seek. As the majority acknowledges, “when ‘the public interest is involved in a proceeding,’ a court’s ‘equitable powers assume an even broader and more flexible character than when only a private controversy is at stake,’ ” ante at 784, quoting Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395, 398, 66 S.Ct. 1086, 90 L.Ed. 1332 (1946). But it then goes on to postulate that “the public interest doesn’t turn on the identity of the parties involved.” Id. That is not accurate. One factor informing the public interest is whether it is the government that is seeking relief. See, e.g., Winter v. Nat. Res. Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 129 S.Ct. 365, 172 L.Ed.2d 249 (2008) (attaching great weight to Navy’s interest in realistic training of sailors). The FTC’s assessment of the public interest here informs the scope of any injunctive relief it is seeking.

The presence of the government as a litigant is especially important to the public-interest component of the analysis when the government seeks remedies that (1) lie uniquely within its toolbox and (2) are aimed squarely at undoing public harms and preventing future ones through deterrence. As the Second Circuit has noted in a section 13\(b\) case of its own (discussed in further detail below), this is precisely what the Commission seeks here by way of an injunction ordering equitable restitution in the form of disgorgement.

“[D]isgorgement is a distinctly public-regarding remedy, available only to government entities seeking to enforce explicit statutory provisions.” FTC v. Bronson Partners, LLC, 654 F.3d 359, 372 (2d Cir. 2011) (affirming an injunction ordering “restitution” under 13(b) authority and discussing the theory underlying what the court understood to be equitable disgorgement).

The Supreme Court has explicitly recognized this feature of disgorgement in the SEC context. “SEC disgorgement is imposed by the courts as a consequence for violating what we described in Meeker as public laws. The violation for which the remedy is sought is committed against the United States rather than an aggrieved individual—this is why, for example, a securities-enforcement action may proceed even if victims do not support or are not parties to the prosecution.” Kokesh v. SEC, — U.S. —, 137 S. Ct. 1635, 198 L.Ed.2d 86 (2017). As the Court acknowledged in Kokesh, this understanding of disgorgement permeates the case law of our sister circuits as well. See SEC v. Teo, 746 F.3d 90, 102 (3d Cir. 2014) (“[T]he SEC pursues [disgorgement] independent of the claims of individual investors in order to promot[e] economic and social policies”) (cleaned up); SEC v. Rind, 991 F.2d 1486, 1491 (9th Cir. 1993) (“[D]isgorgement actions further the Commission’s public policy mission of protecting investors and safeguarding the integrity of the markets”). Here, the FTC is seeking to vindicate the public interest through a public-facing remedy aimed at an ongoing harm. That was not the case in Meghrig, which was certainly about “environmental cleanup” but which rejected a backward-looking remedy that in economic substance sought damages.

The majority also asserts that cases decided since Meghrig demonstrate that it represented a sweeping rejection of implied remedies. Ante at 781. It cites Great-West Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Knudson, 534 U.S. 204, 122 S.Ct. 708, 151 L.Ed.2d 635 (2002); Miller v. French, 530 U.S. 327, 120 S.Ct. 2246, 147 L.Ed.2d 326 (2000); *794 Armstrong v. Exceptional Child Ctr., Inc., — U.S. —, 135 S. Ct. 1378, 191 L.Ed.2d 471 (2015), and Gebser v. Lago Vista Ind. Schl. Dist., 524 U.S. 274, 118 S.Ct. 1989, 141 L.Ed.2d 277 (1998), for this proposition. None of those cases, however, addresses the situation before us: a governmental plaintiff with an express right of action, and an agency that seeks an injunction (also expressly authorized) ordering a wrongdoer to disgorge ill-gotten gains.

Great-West was brought by a private party under the Employment Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) to compel a plan beneficiary to pay over money recovered from a third-party tortfeasor to the plan. The Supreme Court held that the petitioners essentially wanted “to impose personal liability on respondents for a contractual obligation to pay money—relief that was not typically available in equity.” Id. at 210, 122 S.Ct. 708. That took their request beyond the bounds of equitable relief; as the Court put it, “an injunction to compel the payment of money past due under a contract was not typically available in equity.” Id. There is not a hint of contract law in our case, and so Great-West is not applicable. Miller is equally beside the point. There, Congress had acted explicitly to limit the equitable power of the district courts to enjoin the automatic stay provided by the Prison Litigation Reform Act. 530 U.S. at 331, 120 S.Ct. 2246. The Supreme Court held that the statute did not permit district courts to override that provision with a “stay of the stay,” which is what the private litigants sought. No such effort to undo a congressional prohibition exists in our case. Armstrong and Gebser are even further afield. Armstrong holds only that neither the Supremacy Clause (Art. VI, cl. 2 of the Constitution) nor the Medicaid Act confers a private right of action on providers of rehabilitation services, whether for injunctive relief or anything else. Gebser actually does recognize a limited implied private right of action for sexual harassment of schoolchildren. In short, nothing in Meghrig, and nothing in the cases following Meghrig, comes close to holding that a government agency acting pursuant to express authority to seek injunctive relief cannot ask for a mandatory injunction requiring turn-over of money.

Given our decision to cast off a precedent that has guided both this court and other courts of appeals for decades, I add a word about our now-abandoned decision in Amy Travel, which held that the FTC is authorized to obtain restitution as part of the injunctive relief covered by section 13(b). I already have explained why I believe that ruling to be correct. My comments here address the majority’s effort to trivialize the fact that eight of our sister circuits agree with Amy Travel’s holding. They brush off this consensus with the accusation that these courts have done so unthinkingly.

I find that charge quite unwarranted. In the interest of space, I focus on only one of those other cases: the Second Circuit’s opinion in Bronson, 654 F.3d 359 (Lynch, J.). There, the FTC brought suit for an injunction against Bronson for engaging in deceptive advertising of weight-loss products. The district court “entered a permanent injunction against Bronson and ordered it to pay $1,942,325 in monetary equitable relief plus statutory interest.” Id. at 362. Bronson argued, just as Bronson and Credit Bureau have here, that section 13(b) did not permit a court to order monetary relief. The Second Circuit rejected that argument, along with the narrower point that traceability of the ill-gotten gains was essential. But it did so only after a thorough and thoughtful consideration of Bronson’s argument.

After first noting that section 13(b) of the FTC Act permits the FTC to seek *795 permanent injunctive relief, the Second Circuit noted that “courts have consistently held that ‘the unqualified grant of statutory authority to issue an injunction under [S]ection 13(b) carries with it the full range of equitable remedies, including the power to grant consumer redress and compel disgorgement of profits.’ ” 654 F.3d at 365. The Second Circuit explicitly joined that consensus, holding that section 13(b) of the FTC Act permits courts to grant ancillary equitable relief, including equitable monetary relief. Id.

The court then turned to the argument that any kind of monetary award would be “an impermissible legal, rather than equitable, award, because the [district] court failed to identify particular funds in the defendants’ hands that were specifically traceable to the fraudulently marketed products.” Id. at 369. After a lengthy and scholarly discussion of the law of restitution, the Second Circuit concluded that the disgorgement ordered in the case before it was a permissible adjunct to the injunctive relief authorized by section 13(b). This was so because “the district court’s award satisfies the requirements of equitable disgorgement ....” Id. at 370.

The court went on to confirm that “disgorgement is a well-established remedy in the Second Circuit,” often used in actions under section 21(e) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. That statute, which “authorizes an action to enjoin violations of the securities laws, also permits the district court to award disgorgement as an equitable adjunct to its injunctive decree.” Id. at 372. Importantly, “disgorgement—at least when sought by public agencies such as the SEC and the FTC—has several features that make it distinct from the remedies available to private litigants seeking to press common law claims.” Id. That is because “disgorgement is a distinctly public-regarding remedy, available only to government entities seeking to enforce explicit statutory provisions.” Id. That feature also plays a significant role in the case before us.

The Second Circuit also took note of another distinction that I, too have stressed: “public entities [are not] required to make any particular effort to compensate the victims that they can identify,” because the victim is the government, not the individual persons. Id. at 373. It added, “While agencies may, as a matter of grace, attempt to return as much of the disgorgement proceeds as possible, the remedy is not, strictly speaking, restitutionary at all, in that the award runs in favor of the Treasury, not of the victims.” Id. In my view, this point underscores why the restitutionary payment bears no resemblance to individual money damages to the injured parties.

Whatever else one might want to say about the Second Circuit’s analysis in Bronson, it is surely impossible to characterize it as a drive-by ruling or one that was not carefully considered and thoroughly explained. I find it quite persuasive. It demonstrates to me why both we and our sister circuits up until this time have understood that the injunctions authorized by section 13(b) can include a restitutionary component.

Finally, I want to emphasize that even if we were interpreting this statute on a blank slate, rather than upending decades of precedent and creating a split with eight other circuits, the majority’s reading of section 13(b) is still not persuasive. The majority grounds its argument in the contrast between the injunctive relief explicitly authorized in section 13(b) and the remedies available to the agency if it opts to use its cease-and-desist powers under section 5 of the FTC Act or to punish violators of promulgated rules under section 19. (Section 5 of the Act is codified at *796 15 U.S.C. § 45, while section 19 is codified at 15 U.S.C. § 57b. The majority uses the U.S. Code cites for sections other than 13(b); my analysis below uses the same scheme for ease of cross-reference with the majority’s opinion.)

As the majority sees things, we must read 13(b)’s grant of injunctive authority extremely narrowly given that section 57b(b) specifically mentions “the refund of money or return of property” as a form of relief the court can order, and 45(l) allows courts to “grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate.” I do not quibble with the overarching principle that “it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion [of words in different sections of the same Act].” Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 430, 129 S.Ct. 1749, 173 L.Ed.2d 550 (2009) (quotation marks omitted). But a close look at the two contrasting sections reveals that this is not a straightforward case of a list comprised of “A, B, and C” and another consisting of only “A and B.”

I begin with section 57b(b), which lays out remedies for violations of final rules. Our first clue that this subsection should not be read to limit the scope of injunctive relief in a 13(b) action is that courts are directed in 57b(b) to “grant such relief as the court finds necessary to redress injury to consumers or other persons, partnerships, and corporations...” (emphasis added). These are largely backward-facing remedies. As discussed above, courts have long recognized that disgorgement of ill-gotten gains—the sort of equitable restitution at issue here—is a forward-looking remedy aimed at deterrence. Making consumers whole is a possible, but not inevitable, consequence of a disgorgement order. “[T]he primary purpose of disgorgement orders is to deter violations of the [ ] laws by depriving violators of their ill-gotten gains.” Bronson, 654 F.3d at 373, quoting SEC v. Fischbach Corp., 133 F.3d 170, 175 (2d Cir. 1997). (Notably, section 57b(b) actually prohibits courts from imposing “any exemplary or punitive damages.”) Second, while section 57b(b) lists some more forward-looking remedies, such as “public notification respecting the rule violation or the unfair or deceptive act or practice,” this language only highlights how strained it is to read section 57b(b) as a limitation on courts’ 13(b) injunctive authority. Would a court issuing a 13(b) injunction be powerless to order a violator to post “public notification respecting the ... unfair or deceptive act or practice,” simply because this remedy is listed in another subsection? Surely not.

It is also important to recall that the list in 57b(b) is merely illustrative: courts are authorized to order relief that “may include, but shall not be limited to,” the listed remedies. This subsection is thus a poor candidate (at best) for the expressio unius canon. (Compare “Visitors may bring pets into the park on weekdays” with “Animals that visitors are permitted to bring into the park on weekends may include, but shall not be limited to, dogs, cats, snakes, monkeys, and alligators.” Could weekday visitors not bring dogs?) The savings clause in the same section is the coup de grâce for the majority’s reasoning. It cautions that “Remedies provided in this section are in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other remedy or right of action provided by State or Federal law. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any authority of the Commission under any other provision of law.” Id. § 57b(e) (emphasis added). That says it all: the non-exhaustive examples of relief Congress chose to mention in one section do not limit what a court may or may not include pursuant to another section—for instance, a 13(b) injunction.

*797 The list of remedies available to the FTC in a cease-and-desist action, spelled out in section 45\(I\), also provides little help for the majority. True, this section authorizes the FTC to “grant mandatory injunctions and such other and further equitable relief as they deem appropriate ...” But so what? Some forms of equitable relief make sense as standalone remedies, injunction or no injunction. In contrast, equitable remedies are available under 13(b) only if (1) a plaintiff satisfies the demanding burden of demonstrating why an injunction should issue, see eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 126 S.Ct. 1837, 164 L.Ed.2d 641 (2006); and (2) the court is able to justify the relief it is ordering as a proper adjunct to the injunctive decree. By allowing courts to issue “such other and further equitable relief,” section 45\(I\) clarifies that courts have a wide range of equitable relief available to them, no matter whether plaintiffs managed to obtain an injunction or, if an injunction has issued, whether the remedies are appropriate means of enforcing the decree. Under 45\(I\), a court could order an accounting or some sort of specific performance whether or not the requirements for a mandatory injunction had been satisfied.

There are further weaknesses in the majority’s reading of the statute, but I have said enough to show that its approach is far from the most straightforward even if we did not have decades of precedent, eight other circuits, and American Stores on the other side. The FTC Act spells out a finely crafted system of enforcement powers and remedies. The majority’s interpretation upends what the agency and Congress have understood to be the status quo for thirty years, and in so doing grants a needless measure of impunity to brazen scammers like the defendant in this case.

I end where I began: This is an important case, and it deserves plenary consideration, not the truncated process that Rule 40(e) provides for appropriate cases. The court’s refusal to rehear this case en banc has, I fear, led us into error. I therefore dissent from the decision not to give this case plenary en banc consideration.

All Citations

937 F.3d 764, 2019-2 Trade Cases P 80,883

Footnotes

- 1 Because this opinion overrules circuit precedent and creates a circuit split, we circulated it under Circuit Rule 40(e) to all judges in active service. A majority did not favor rehearing en banc.
- 2 Shortly before Singer, the Fifth Circuit held that section 13(b)’s preliminary-injunction provision implicitly authorizes asset freezes. See FTC v. Sw. Sunsites, Inc., 665 F.2d 711, 718 (5th Cir. 1982). But its holding appeared to preclude the possibility of restitution in section 13(b), pointing instead to § 57b for monetary remedies. Id. at 719 (“[T]he exhortation in [Mitchell] to preserve the possibility of complete relief ... makes it appropriate to consider that the final, complete relief in this case may entail consumer redress through a [§ 57b] proceeding.”). Predictably, no circuit has materially relied on Southwest Sunsites to support an implied restitution award.
- 3 Chief Judge Wood’s dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc relies heavily on FTC v. Bronson Partners, LLC, 654 F.3d 359 (2d Cir. 2011), but there the Second Circuit summarily followed the lead of other circuits in reading section 13(b) to include an implied power to order restitution. Id. at 365. The court quickly moved on to, and thoroughly considered, a wholly different question: whether the implied restitution remedy is equitable or legal. The lengthy passages quoted in the chief judge’s dissent relate to that second-order question. Moreover, Bronson rejected the view that the plain meaning of “injunction” encompasses restitution. Id. at 367 (approving restitution because “section 13(b) does not limit the district court to awarding only injunctions”) (emphasis added).
- 4 Because we hold that section 13\(b\) doesn’t authorize monetary relief, we have no need to consider Brown’s alternative arguments that the Commission can’t pursue penalties or legal—as distinct from equitable—restitution under section 13\(b\). See FTC v. AMG Capital Mgmt., LLC, 910 F.3d 417, 429 (9th Cir. 2018) (O’Scannlain, J., concurring) (discussing these arguments). We also don’t need to consider the district court’s asset-freeze determinations.

EXHIBIT D

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

<hr/>		)
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,		)
Plaintiff-Appellee,		)
		)
v.		)	Nos. 18-2847, 18-3310
		)
CREDIT BUREAU CENTER, LLC, et al.,		)
Defendants-Appellants.		)
<hr/>		)

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION’S MOTION TO STAY
THE MANDATE PURSUANT TO FED. R. APP. P. 41(d)

Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 41(d) and 28 U.S.C. § 2101(f), the Federal Trade Commission respectfully moves to stay the mandate of this Court pending the filing and disposition of a petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Court issued its decision on August 21, and the mandate is due to issue on October 15. See Fed. R. App. P. 26(a)(1), 40(a)(1), 41(a).

As discussed below, a stay of the mandate is necessary to preserve the status quo pending likely Supreme Court review. The FTC is currently holding approximately $1.1 million obtained from defendants Michael Brown and his company Credit Bureau Center, LLC (collectively, “Brown”) in partial satisfaction of the district court’s $5.2 million restitution award. Because the panel vacated the restitution award, the FTC will be required to return this money if the mandate issues. Given Brown’s extensive history of dishonesty, both before and after the initiation of this case, it is highly likely that if the Supreme Court were to reinstate the restitution award, these assets would be dissipated. That would mean the FTC could not recover the money and consumer injury would be left unredressed. To avert that outcome, the Court should stay its mandate, allowing the FTC to safeguard the funds until the conclusion of Supreme Court proceedings.

BACKGROUND

The facts of this case are set forth in detail in the Court's August 21 opinion. Briefly, the FTC brought this action under Section 13(b) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 53(b), which allows a court to grant a "permanent injunction" when the FTC has shown a violation of the Act. The FTC showed that Brown violated the Act through a deceptive scheme that tricked consumers into signing up for a $30/month credit monitoring service. The district court permanently enjoined Brown from engaging in similar conduct and ordered him to pay $5.2 million in restitution. The FTC is currently holding approximately $1.1 million in funds obtained from Brown; the rest of the judgment remains unsatisfied. The district court stayed any distribution of the funds to injured consumers or the Treasury "pending conclusion of defendants' appeal." ECF No. 266 at 3.

On August 21, this Court affirmed the district court's liability determination and behavioral injunction, but vacated the restitution award. Overruling longstanding circuit precedent pursuant to Circuit Rule 40(e), the Court held that the permanent injunction authority in Section 13(b) of the FTC Act does not allow monetary relief. Op. 3. The Court acknowledged that its decision “creates a circuit split” with numerous other courts of appeals because its “conclusion departs from the consensus view of our sister circuits.” Op. 3 n.1; 41. Three judges dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc.

The FTC and the Office of the Solicitor General are currently evaluating whether to file a petition for a writ of certiorari in this case. Under the FTC Act, the Solicitor General may decide whether to seek certiorari on behalf of the FTC, but if he decides not to do so, the FTC may file a petition on its own. See 15 U.S.C. § 56(a)(3).

ARGUMENT

This Court may stay its mandate pending the filing of a petition for a writ of certiorari when “the petition would present a substantial question and ... there is good cause for a stay.” Fed. R. App. P. 41(d)(1). The inquiry focuses on “whether the applicant has a reasonable probability of succeeding on the merits and whether the applicant will suffer irreparable injury” if the mandate issues. Books v. City of Elkhart, 239 F.3d 826, 827 (7th Cir. 2001) (Ripple, J., in chambers). The success factor requires “a reasonable probability that four Justices will vote to grant certiorari and a reasonable possibility that five Justices will vote to reverse the judgment of this court.” Id. at 828; see also United States ex rel. Chandler v. Cook

County, 282 F.3d 448, 450-51 (7th Cir. 2002) (Ripple, J., in chambers) (granting motion to stay mandate given the importance of the issue to the government, the conflict among the courts of appeals, and possible prejudice to the government). The FTC satisfies all requirements for a stay.

1.a. There is a reasonable probability that four Justices will vote to grant certiorari. The Supreme Court's rules state that certiorari is appropriate where "a United States court of appeals has entered a decision in conflict with the decision of another United States court of appeals on the same important matter." Sup. Ct. R. 10(a). As a leading treatise explains, demonstrating a circuit split is the "most assured way" of obtaining Supreme Court review. 23 Moore's Federal Practice – Civil § 510.21[1] (3d ed. 1999), Lexis (database updated 2019). The decision here created a circuit split, as the panel acknowledged. As matters stand, the law in seven circuits is that Section 13(b) authorizes awards of equitable monetary relief (restitution or disgorgement).<sup>1</sup> In this circuit, the law is now the exact opposite.

---

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., FTC v. Commerce Planet, Inc., 815 F.3d 593, 598-99 (9th Cir. 2016); FTC v. Ross, 743 F.3d 886, 890-92 (4th Cir. 2014); FTC v Bronson Partners, LLC, 654 F.3d 359, 365-67 (2d Cir. 2011); FTC v. Direct Mktg. Concepts, Inc., 624 F.3d 1, 15 (1st Cir. 2010); FTC v. Freecom Commc'ns, Inc., 401 F.3d 1192, 1202 n.6 (10th Cir. 2005); FTC v. Gem Merch. Corp., 87 F.3d 466, 470 (11th Cir. 1996); FTC v. Sec. Rare Coin & Bullion Corp., 931 F.2d. 1312, 1314-15 (8th Cir. 1991); see also FTC v. Magazine Sols., LLC, 432 F. App'x 155, 158 n.2 (3d Cir. 2011) (unpublished).

Beyond the mere existence of a circuit split, “[t]he important and recurring nature of the issue in conflict often plays a decisive role in the grant or denial of certiorari.” Robert L. Stern et al., Supreme Court Practice 228 (8th ed. 2002). Here, the question whether monetary relief is available under Section 13(b) is a recurring one of great public importance. Suits for injunctions and equitable monetary relief have been a cornerstone of the FTC’s enforcement program for more than 30 years, and the agency files dozens of cases each year under Section 13(b). And while this Court is the only court of appeals that has held that Section 13(b) does not authorize equitable monetary relief, litigants have advocated that position in several other cases, including at least three currently pending appeals in different circuits.<sup>2</sup>

The matter is also of great public importance. Over the years, the FTC has utilized Section 13(b) to return billions of dollars to victimized American consumers, and the Court’s ruling casts doubt on the future availability of that remedy. Moreover, the question whether a statute that authorizes grant of a “permanent injunction” also allows equitable monetary relief implicates not just

---

<sup>2</sup> The case farthest along in the appellate process is FTC v. AMG Capital Mgmt., LLC, 910 F.3d 417 (9th Cir. 2018), in which the Ninth Circuit adhered to its precedent holding that Section 13(b) does authorize equitable monetary relief; the Supreme Court has granted an extension of time to file a petition for a writ of certiorari in that case until October 18. Defendants have also raised the same issue in FTC v. AbbVie, Inc., No. 18-2621 (3d Cir.), and FTC v. Simple Health Plans, LLC. No. 19-11932 (11th Cir.), which have not yet been argued.

the FTC, but other federal agencies as well. Like the FTC Act, the organic acts of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Food and Drug Administration authorize courts to issue injunctions but do not expressly mention monetary relief. See 15 U.S.C. § 77t(b); id. § 78u(d); 21 U.S.C. § 332(a). Relying on the same legal theory used to interpret Section 13(b), courts have consistently held that these statutes likewise allow restitution or disgorgement.<sup>3</sup> The Court’s decision thus threatens to undermine a wide swath of federal law enforcement.

b. If certiorari is granted, there is a reasonable possibility that five Justices will vote to reverse the judgment of this Court. The cases holding that Section 13(b) authorizes equitable monetary relief rest on the Supreme Court’s decisions in Porter v. Warner Holding Co., 328 U.S. 395 (1946), and Mitchell v. Robert DeMario Jewelry, Inc., 361 U.S. 288 (1960). Porter and Mitchell hold that when a statute authorizes issuance of an injunction, “all the inherent equitable powers of the District Court are available for the proper and complete exercise of that jurisdiction” unless Congress has restricted that jurisdiction “in so many words” or “by a necessary and inescapable inference.” Porter, 328 U.S. at 398;

---

<sup>3</sup> See, e.g., SEC v. First City Fin. Corp., 890 F.2d 1215, 1230 (D.C. Cir. 1989); SEC v. Manor Nursing Ctrs., 458 F.2d 1082, 1103-06 (2d Cir. 1972); SEC v. Tex. Gulf Sulfur Co., 446 F.2d 1301, 1307-08 (2d Cir. 1971); United States v. Rx Depot, Inc., 438 F.3d 1052, 1054-63 (10th Cir. 2006); United State v. Lane Labs-USA, Inc., 427 F.3d 219, 223-36 (3d Cir. 2005); United States v. Univ. Mgmt. Servs., Inc., 191 F.3d 750, 760-62 (6th Cir. 1999).

see also Mitchell, 361 U.S. at 291. In other words, when Congress grants a court authority to issue a permanent injunction, that grant includes the power to award all equitable remedies, including monetary relief, unless it clearly says otherwise.

Instead of following that rule, this Court effectively applied the opposite rule, holding that Section 13(b) cannot be read to authorize equitable monetary relief because Congress did not explicitly authorize that remedy. The Court concluded that Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc., 516 U.S. 479 (1996), signaled a change in the way the Supreme Court reads injunctive relief statutes: “[s]ince Meghrig, the Court has adhered to this more limited understanding of judicially implied remedies.” Op. 33. But other courts have read Meghrig differently. The Third Circuit explained after careful examination of Meghrig that there is no “indication, either in Meghrig or since, that the Court has abandoned the holdings of Porter and Mitchell,” which remain controlling. United States v. Lane Labs-USA, Inc., 427 F.3d 219, 225, 232, 236 (3d Cir. 2005). Similarly, the Tenth Circuit stated bluntly that “Meghrig does not overrule or limit Porter and Mitchell.” United States v. Rx Depot, Inc., 438 F.3d 1052, 1057 n.3 (10th Cir. 2006).

Among other differences, Meghrig was a private party suit, not an enforcement action by the government to protect the public. Lane Labs, 427 F.3d at 231; Rx Depot, 438 F.3d at 1057. There is also a “considerable difference” between the relief requested in Meghrig, which “resemble[d] traditional damages,” and an equitable remedy seeking the return of sums paid by consumers for illegally marketed products. Lane Labs, 427 F.3d at 231. Certainly it is at least reasonably possible that five Justices would agree with the Third and Tenth Circuits that Meghrig does not undermine or limit the reasoning of Porter and Mitchell. Indeed, three judges of this Court dissented from the panel's opinion and opined that Meghrig did not have the effect ascribed to it by the panel. See Op. 56-59 (Wood, C.J., dissenting).

Furthermore, far from questioning the continuing vitality of Porter and Mitchell, the Supreme Court has continued to cite and rely upon Porter in cases subsequent to Meghrig. In United States v. Oakland Cannabis Buyers' Co-Op., 532 U.S. 483 (2001), the Court cited Porter for the proposition that a court of equity has broad discretion to fashion injunctive relief considering the public interest, which can be "displaced only by a 'clear and valid legislative command.'" Id. at 496-97 (cleaned up). Even more recently, in Kansas v. Nebraska, 135 S. Ct. 1042 (2015), the Court invoked Porter to uphold an equitable disgorgement award in a water-rights dispute between two States. Id. at 1051, 1053. These decisions suggest, contrary to this Court's opinion, that the Court has not retreated from the reasoning of Porter and Mitchell.

To be sure, the Supreme Court may abandon the interpretive approach that it endorsed in Porter and Mitchell. But there is at least a reasonable possibility that it will adhere to its existing precedents. Just this past term, the Court reiterated that “[o]verruling precedent is never a small matter.” Kisor v. Willkie, 139 S. Ct. 2400, 2422 (2019) (quoting Kimble v. Marvel Entm’t, LLC, 135 S. Ct. 2401, 2409 (2015)). The Court emphasized that “[a]dherence to precedent is a foundation stone of the rule of law,” which “promotes the evenhanded, predictable, and consistent development of legal principles, fosters reliance on judicial decisions, and contributes to the actual and perceived integrity of the judicial process.” Id. (cleaned up). A departure from precedent “demands ‘special justification’— something more than ‘an argument that the precedent was wrongly decided.’” Id. (quoting Halliburton Co. v. Erica P. John Fund, Inc., 573 U.S. 258, 266 (2014)).

Respect for precedent is especially important in statutory interpretation cases, where Congress is free to alter what the courts have done. Id., 139 S. Ct. at 2422-23. If anything, the Court is especially reluctant to depart from existing precedent where “Congress has long acquiesced in the interpretation” at issue. John R. Sand & Gravel Co. v. United States, 552 U.S. 130, 139 (2008); see also Monessen Sw. Ry. Co. v. Morgan, 486 U.S. 330, 338 (1988). In the case of Section 13(b), Congress has long known that courts have interpreted the statute as authorizing equitable monetary relief, has amended the FTC Act many times, and has never once sought to limit this authority. Nor has Congress limited the ability of other agencies to obtain equitable monetary relief under injunctive-relief statutes. Congress's decision to leave intact the consistent judicial interpretation of these statutes is a strong indication that it has acquiesced in, and apparently agrees with, the rule of Porter and Mitchell.

2. The FTC and the consumers harmed by Brown's illegal scheme will suffer irreparable injury if the mandate is not stayed. To date, the FTC has been able to recover only $1.1 million of the $5.2 million judgment; the district court stayed the distribution of those funds to injured consumers "pending conclusion of defendants' appeal." ECF No. 266 at 3. If the mandate issues, the FTC will be required to return these funds to Brown, who will be free to spend them or place them beyond the reach of a court judgment. Even if the Supreme Court reinstates the restitution award, there is a high probability that the assets will be dissipated, the FTC will not be able to recover on the judgment, and the monetary injury to consumers will go unredressed.

Brown's dishonest conduct both before and after the initiation of this suit shows that he cannot be trusted to retain these funds while Supreme Court proceedings are pending. Brown scammed consumers out of more than $5 million by promising them "free" credit reports, when he was actually signing them up for a $30/month credit monitoring service. And through his accomplices, Brown posted Craigslist ads for fake rental properties to drive consumers to his deceptive websites. Given this egregious misconduct, this Court had "no trouble" affirming the district court's liability determination. Op. 2. Brown also continued to engage in misconduct after the suit was filed. Among other things, he continued to bill customers for credit monitoring services even after the district court entered a preliminary injunction barring him from doing so; the court found Brown in contempt in July 2017. ECF No. 106; see also ECF No. 113 at 44 (finding "beyond a shadow of a doubt" that Brown violated the preliminary injunction and "there's no question that he didn't make a reasonable and diligent effort to comply."). And in denying Brown's motion for a stay pending appeal, the district court noted that "Brown has displayed an unwillingness, both before and during the lawsuit, to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law." ECF No. 266 at 3.

Both the Supreme Court and this Court have recognized that an inability to recover money after Supreme Court reversal may be an irreparable injury sufficient to support a stay. In Heckler v. Turner, 486 U.S. 1305 (1984), then-Justice Rehnquist held that the government would suffer irreparable injury if forced to make certain payments to welfare beneficiaries because in the event of reversal "it is extremely unlikely that the [government] would be able to recover funds improperly paid out." Id. at 1308. Justice Powell reached a similar conclusion in another case involving welfare payments, holding that Georgia would suffer irreparable injury because "it is unlikely that disputed payments made pursuant to the District Court’s judgment could be recovered” in the event of reversal.

Ledbetter v. Baldwin, 479 U.S. 1309, 1310 (1986). In Gates v. Syrian Arab Republic, No. 13-2280, 2014 U.S. App. LEXIS 21445 (7th Cir. July 30, 2014) (Hamilton, J., in chambers), this Court denied a stay on the grounds that the movant had not shown either a likelihood of certiorari being granted or a reasonable possibility of reversal. But it nonetheless recognized the possibility of irreparable injury, noting that “[i]f the funds ... are distributed and if the Supreme Court were later to reverse this court’s judgment, it could be difficult to recover all of the funds,” and “some of the money might no longer be recoverable.” Id. at *3.

In this case, given Brown’s demonstrated history of dishonesty and the fact that the FTC has thus far been able to recover less than a quarter of the money he took from consumers, it is extremely unlikely that the FTC will be able to recover anything for consumers if it returns the $1.1 million now but prevails at the end of the day. Given the likelihood of Supreme Court review and the reasonable possibility of reversal, a stay of the mandate to prevent this outcome is warranted.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should stay its mandate pending the filing and disposition of a petition for a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

ALDEN F. ABBOTT
General Counsel

JOEL MARCUS
Deputy General Counsel

/s/Michael D. Bergman

MICHAEL D. BERGMAN
Attorney

Office of the General Counsel
FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
Washington, D.C. 20580
(202) 326-3184
mbergman@ftc.gov

Of Counsel:

GUY G. WARD

Attorney

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
Chicago, IL 60604

Dated: September 17, 2019

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE

I certify that the FTC's foregoing motion complies with the form, typeface, type style, and length of motions requirements in Fed. R. App. P. 27(d), 32(a)(5), 32(a)(6), because it contains 2982 words (excluding the parts exempted by Fed. R. App. P. 32(f)), and has been prepared in proportionally spaced typeface using Microsoft Word 2016 in Times New Roman 14-point font.

/s/ Michael D. Bergman

Michael D. Bergman

Attorney, Federal Trade Commission

Date: September 17, 2019

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that on September 17, 2019, I filed the foregoing via the Court's electronic filing system. All parties will be served by the CM/ECF system.

/s/ Michael D. Bergman

Michael D. Bergman

Attorney, Federal Trade Commission

Date: September 17, 2019